THE WAR.

Rumored Surrender of the Prussians Before Orleans.

Further Particulars of the Sorties from Paris.

Conflicting Statements Regarding the Bravery of the Parisians.

Progress of Gen. Burnside's Mission.

Condition of the Several Besieged Cities.

A STARTLING RUMOR

Reported Surrender of the Prussians Before Orleans—Extensive Movement to the South of Paris.

TOURS, Oct. 15—Evening.—The rumors from Orleans are startling. It is assured that the Prussians there, who are known to have been in large force, have surrendered to the French, with all their artillery. The French forces are continually increasing. The Government authorities have given the public nothing from Orleans for a day or two. Messengers sent forward by the Associated Press Agency, two days ago, have not yet returned. There is much anxiety to hear the official news.

THE REPORT CONFIRMED.

LONDON, Oct. 15.—A special dispatch from Tours, dated 2¼ this afternoon, says it is rumored that Orleans has been evacuated, the Prussians having been driven back. The excitement was enormous. A second dispatch, dated 5:25 P. M., says the rumor of the evacuation of Orleans is confirmed by official announcement.

A SOUTHERN MOVE.

A Paris letter, dated on Tuesday, the 11th, has the following news: "The Prussians, in force, are moving southerly. The Mobiles are following to watch their movements, and as an additional precaution troops have been sent in the other direction."

OPERATIONS BEFORE PARIS.

The Sortie of the 13th—M. Keratry's Account of It—Fighting in the Woods—French Successes.

TOURS, Oct. 15.—A communication, dated at Chaumont this morning, states that M. KERATRY, the Chief of Police, who left Paris yesterday morning at 10 o'clock in a balloon, descended the same day at Bar-le-Duc, having escaped the pursuit of the enemy. He was slightly wounded in his leg and head by the sudden fall of the balloon.

A SPLENDID FIGHT.

On the 13th inst. a splendid fight took place at Bagneux and Chatillon, whence the enemy was dislodged during a reconnoissance of our forces. The enemy sustained considerable losses. The Mobiles of the Departments of Cote d'Or and Aube behaved handsomely. Gen. DAUPIERRE, the commander of the Aube Mobiles, was killed at the head of his command. The Prussian batteries were dismounted. At dusk our troops withdrew to their lines in admirable order. According to a preconcerted plan the sailors in Fort de Montrouge were admirable in covering the retreat. The firing from the cannon in Forts de Montrouge and de Vauves was most telling. The chateau of St. Cloud was destroyed by the fire.

PARIS PATRIOTIC.

Paris, he says, is as patriotic and more determined than ever. The Government had reviewed the National Guard, and was enthusiastically cheered. It is asserted that M. KERATRY will come hither.

LONDON, Oct. 15.—St. Cloud must have been wantonly burned by the Parisian shell, as no Prussians were there at the time.

FIGHTING IN THE WOODS.

NEMOURS, Oct. 15.—A body of Franc-Tireurs attacked a squad of Wurtemberg cavalry in the forest of Fontainebleau today, killing many of them. The remainder were pursued to Melun. The Prussian garrison there retreated on the approach of the French, leaving behind a large amount of provisions and stores, which fell into our hands.

TOURS, Oct. 15.—The following news is made public by the Government authorities;

The French made a strong reconnoissance to Laforte a few days since. The Prussians were encountered, and after a short conflict driven off. A Prussian camp has been established at Soudillon.

PRUSSIAN OPERATIONS.

LONDON, Oct. 15.—The Prussian earthworks before Fort Mont du Velerien are irksome to the French garrison, whose fire is incessant. The Germans are generally passive, and will remain so until all preparations for a general bombardment are completed. The sorties of the French at Paris have all been successfully repelled. A siege train of heavy guns has just arrived before Paris from Germany.

LONDON, Oct. 15—Evening.—The Prussians before Paris are very inactive. It is thought their apathy is merely the prelude to a formidable attack.

BRAVERY OF THE PARISIANS.

Contradictory Statements—One Correspondent Declares That There is no Lack of Courage—Another Scoffs at the Sham Heroism of the People—Further Defenses.

LONDON, Oct. 15.—The Paris correspondent of the London Standard, writing under a late date, says: "There is no sickness; no lack of food; no lack of courage. On my honor, the Prussians can never get in."

A correspondent of the London Post, writing from Paris, on the other hand, laughs at the sham heroism of the people of that city. Loud talk without deeds, and without hope of any, drinking, bragging and frivolity are universal. He says the Government is as blustering, weak and incompetent as the people. The Prussians say they will soon have rifled guns capable of throwing 300-pound shells five miles. A number of these ponderous projectiles are on the way from the Baltic.

M. GAMBETTA'S OPINION.

M. GAMBETTA has issued a congratulatory proclamation to the people, citing the new evidences of courage just given by the Parisians. They are demanding every day to be led on a sortie against the enemy. They have already driven the Prussians from Stains, Daguy, Pierrefitte, Joinville, Bibigny, Cretaine, Bas Meudon and St. Cloud. The north of France is alive since the glorious affair at St. Quentin.

ANOTHER VIEW.

TOURS, Oct. 15.—A Paris letter says: "Much impatience is manifested in Paris at the inaction of the Prussians. The Parisians desire, above all things, to be attacked. As there is no immediate prospect of this the French are preparing to make a formidable attack on the besiegers."

FURTHER DEFENSES OF THE CITY.

TOURS, Oct. 15.—The Arc de Triomphe at Paris is to be iron-clad. Walls will then be constructed around it. It is thought that it will thus become a formidable fortress. It will be armed with the enormous steel cannon which are now being manufactured. In the rear of Notre Dame a park of artillery stands ready for use in case the Prussians attack on the side toward Bercy. Heavy cannon will also be stationed on the Island of St. Louis, which has already been strongly fortified, in case the Prussians should penetrate the city.

BRUSSELS, Oct. 15.—The Paris correspondent of the Independance Belge thinks it possible Paris may be saved. He describes the mines and pitfalls which have been thrown so thick around the enceinte. Great quantities of heavy guns, stores and projectiles have been accumulated. Batteries of mitrailleuses are sweeping every approach to the city. He refers to the cold wet weather which must scatter disease among the besiegers.

THE BESIEGED CITIES.

Reported Escape of Bazaine—A Great Victory Achieved.

TOURS, Oct. 15.—BAZAINE has escaped from Metz and is marching with his full force to the relief of Verdun.

LONDON, Oct. 15—Evening.—The Standard has a telegram from Tours, announcing a great victory by Gen. BAZAINE at Metz, who appears to be free to move upon Thionville. This report is considered doubtful.

Metz, Soissons, Verdun, and New Breisach—Result of the First Day's Bombardment of the Former.

LONDON, Oct. 15.—A deserter from Metz reports that the bread and salt are entirely exhausted, though there is an apparent plenty of other provisions.

The formal siege of Soissons and Verdun has begun. The fact has already been developed that both fortifications are well supplied with artillery and experienced gunners. The Prussians occupy the heights at Soissons, and have fortified them. The town is making a gallant resistance.

New-Breisach is constantly bombarded. The garrison answers vigorously. The following is given as the result of the first day's bombardment of New-Breisach: Seven persons killed, twenty-one wounded, and ten buildings burned. The place is well provisioned and the garrison obstinate in its defense.

A Great Sortie on the 19th—No Particulars.

TOURS, Oct. 15.—Intelligence, believed to be reliable, has just been received here to the effect that a great sortie was made at Paris on Wednesday, the 12th, by 120,000 men, strongly supported by cannon and mitrailleuses. No particulars are received.

TOURS, Oct. 15—Evening.—The news of the successful sortie by the Parisians has created a marked sensation among the population and the soldiers. Dispatches received this evening announce further successes by the Franco-Tireurs.

EFFORTS FOR PEACE.

Gen. Burnside's Mission—Bismarck's Ultimatum and Favre's Determination—Circular From the Government.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

LONDON, Oct. 15.—It is probable that Gen. BURNSIDE will be able to get those Americans out of Paris who are yet remaining in the city, but the success of his efforts will be limited to that result. His labors as mediator have ended as might have been expected. BISMARCK continues to insist on the cession of Alsace and Lorraine. JULES FAVRE, fortified by the improved military condition of the capital, and the temper and power of resistance of the people, declares that the nation shall perish before it shall yield to such conditions.

LONDON, Oct. 15—Evening.—It is credited here that negotiations are quietly but actively proceeding with a view to effecting a peace. The main obstacle now is the belligerent temper exhibited by the Parisians.

FLORENCE, Oct. 15.—M. THIERS had an audience, yesterday, with King VICTOR EMMANUEL, which lasted an hour.

TOURS, Oct. 15.—Gen. BURNSIDE returned to the Prussian head-quarters yesterday. He is expected in Paris again to-morrow. It is said negotiations looking to peace are going on actively, though the people of Paris seem to be determined to oppose any peace based upon the cession of French territory or in any way humiliating.

On the 8th inst. the Government sent a circular to its representatives in other countries, refuting by historical proof the argument made by Count VON BISMARCK that liberal France had ever desired conquest or ever worked against German unity.

Another circular, dated on the 10th inst., asserts that the pretensions of Prussia would reduce France to a second-rate Power. The circulars dwell upon the fact that the Prussian announcement of her readiness to bombard Paris was premature.

MAX POL has answered M. PIETRI's letter in which he (PIETRI) says NAPOLEON had no money in the funds. POL enumerates the investments, aggregating over 63,000,000, in which the Emperor was interested, and says he was in a position to know that this is true. He further says he is confident that THELIN, NAPOLEON'S Treasurer, will not contradict the statement.

AID FOR FRANCE

Arrival of Arms at Havre by the Lafayette.

LONDON, Oct. 15.—The correspondent of the NEW-YORK TIMES at Havre, writing on the 14th inst., says: "Yesterday I saw 14,000 Springfield muskets which arrived here by the Lafayette. This time the story that the arms came from America is true. Havre has some cannon and two new fortifications, besides the old harbor batteries, and could make a good defense. Business is dead here. There is comparatively no shipping in the docks. The Lafayette sails for New-York on Thursday.

AID FROM THE IRISH.

The event of the hour is the arrival of the Irish ambulance corps at Havre. I am much mistaken if this sanitary organization does not take its share in the fighting when an opportunity offers. The London Times, this morning, calls on the Government to enforce the Enlistment act against Irishmen departing for the purpose of entering into the service of France.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Effect of the War and the Drouth—Scarcity of Food Throughout France—American's Opportunity.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

LONDON, Oct. 15.—The NEW-YORK TIMES' correspondent at Rouen lately writes from Germany: "Horses are selling for almost nothing, but there is little hay left in Normandy. The drouth last Summer cut off the crops. The most anxious consideration for France, and in a less degree for Germany, is that of food, not only for this Winter, but throughout all next year. BISMARCK'S picture of starvation in Paris after its capture will apply to the whole of France and probably half of Europe. I am often told, 'God knows what will become of us if America does not send us food in immense quantities;' and while in Germany, in Prussia, Bavaria and Hesse, I was daily asked, 'In what condition is America to supply us with cereals during the next twelve months? We shall have to draw heavily on you.' Let American exporters take a hint from this."

No Further Trouble from the Socialists in Paris—Dispatches from Minister Washburne.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

LONDON, Oct. 15.—With regard to the Socialist troubles in Paris, on which the Germans have counted so confidently, facts now made known remove all cause of disquietude to France from that source. BLANQUI and his associates have been effectually gagged, without any necessity for a resort to extreme measures on the part of the Provisional Government.

Col. MOORE, second Secretary of the French Legation, left London this morning, with dispatches for Minister WASHBURNE. This is probably the last exchange of dispatches which will be permitted by the Prussians.

MISCELLANEOUS NOTES.

LONDON, Oct. 15—Afternoon.—The Prussian Minister at Brussels has demanded that the proprietors of the Independance Belge be punished for their partisanship and untruthfulness.

The priests at Bretagne are preaching in favor of a crusade against the Teutonic heretics.

LONDON, Oct. 15.—The detention of JACOBY aggrieves the German Democrats, who protest firmly. The present North German Constitution will probably form the basis for the reconstruction of the Empire.

M. VILLEMOT, formerly editor of the Figaro and Tempo, died yesterday.

Gen. Bourbaki—Garibaldi and the People—Trials of Deserters and Unfaithful Officers.

LONDON, Oct. 15.—Gen. BOURBAKI arrived at Tours on Friday night. The customary demonstrations were made. The General subsequently had an interview with CREMIEUX.

TOURS, Oct. 15.—It is said here that Prince NAPOLEON was engaged in the affair of calling Gen. BOURBAKI to London, but the good sense of the latter got the better of the Prince's intrigue. The General confirms the previous statement as to the excellent condition of Marshal BAZAINE'S army. Metz and the surrounding country were well supplied with fresh food.

Gen. BOURBAKI has been appointed to a command near Orleans. He has gone forward to his post. Gen. GARIBALDI arrived at Besancon on Friday. He was formally welcomed by the authorities. There was intense enthusiasm among the people and soldiers. GARIBALDI at once proceeds to reconnoitre the Prussian position.

The French commander at Epinal announces that his communications with Luneville are perfect.

The Council of War in Paris is holding sessions to try deserters. Several have been sentenced to death. Last night an unfounded rumor was circulated to the effect that GUSTAVE FLOURENS would make a demonstration with his command of the National Guards. As a precaution several battalions of the National Guards were placed in the Hotel de Ville. It is assured that the Commander-in-Chief will remove FLOURENS from the command of the five battalions of the National Guard.

An official decree issued today orders before the Court-martial all Generals or other commanders of troops who are surprised by the enemy.

The Orleans Princes—M. Thiers Expected at Tours—Balloon Strategy.

TOURS, Oct. 15.—The journals here report that the Orleans Princes have been enrolled in the army which is now forming at Rouen.

The Prussians recently captured a balloon which had been dispatched from Paris. The French sent up two balloons in order to prevent suspicion, and then allowed one of them to be captured. This contained a large number of circulars printed in the German language, as well as the different proclamations lately issued by the Government.

The Secretary of M. THIERS arrived in Tours this evening. M. THIERS himself is expected on Tuesday next.

It is reported that M. GAMBETTA has energetically ordered the cessation of all persecution of the clergy at Lyons and Marseilles.

The Government authorities are manufacturing enormous steel guns to carry 9,000 metres.

LONDON, Oct. 15.—Among the Imperial manuscripts discovered and seized at the Tuileries was a novel illustrating the advantages of an Imperial régime. The Pall Mall Gazette of this city today gives an outline of the plot of the novel.

SIX hundred pounds sterling have been collected at the gate of the Strasbourg citadel, from sight-seers, since the Prussian occupation of the city. This money will be appropriated to the aid of the German wounded.

INDIA.

The Late Panic at Allahabad—Another Sepoy Rising Foreshadowed.

The Pall Mall Gazette says it had already been informed by telegraph that the alarm felt by the residents at Allahabad a few weeks since respecting the alleged disaffection in a native regiment stationed there was groundless. It appears from the papers received by the Indian mail on Oct. 8 that there was quite a panic on the subject at Allahabad; and some of the papers mention as a proof that these apprehensions were not entirely unfounded, that several companies of European troops had been promptly ordered to the city, and that the Magistrate there had considered it desirable to ask the European residents by circular to desist from betraying any alarm. The Jubbulpore Chronicle of the 21st of August publishes the following extract of a letter from a correspondent in Allahabad: "We have been in a panic-stricken state here for no less than three days, owing to the well-known disaffected state of the Sepoy regiment (70th strong.) Yesterday, (Aug. 20,) especially there was a great panic, hundreds of families took refuge, some at the railway station, others at previously appointed places of rendezvous. All sorts of rumors are, of course, flying about more or less exaggerated, but of this there can be no doubt, that the budmashes and the entire Mohammedan population of this place, together with the Sepoys, are really hatching something. Today the Assistant-Adjutant General and another general officer had a private meeting with the Magistrate, and it is believed that urgent telegrams have been sent to the military authorities at Cawnpore for troops. Rifles have been distributed to the railway people, about 300, and it is agreed upon by all that as soon as the signal gun is heard, everyone is to fly to a given place of rendezvous. There must be 2,000 rounds of grape, as the artillerymen would not have been served with ammunition, with spikes to spike the large siege guns, in case of a disturbance, their horses harnessed night and day, &c. The military and civil authorities have not warned people, though they know full well the state of affairs. The manner of the natives and threats of coming events by Mohammedan servants abound. It is, in fact, a second edition of 1857, only on a smaller scale. It is rumored that as soon as more troops come the Fourth National Infantry will be disbanded. The men of that regiment were caught stealing away from their lines at night to hold conference with the Wahabees at the Chowk, a thing they have been in the habit of doing for months. Gunpowder, revolvers, caps, &c., sold yesterday, amounted to hundreds of rupees. No revolvers are to be had here."

THE REPUBLICAN MEETING.

Overthrow of the Honest Members of the General Committee.

The Obnoxious Resolution Rescinded by the Tammany Republicans—Disgraceful Conduct of the Ruling Faction.

A special meeting of the Republican General Committee was held at head-quarters, corner of Twenty-second-street and Broadway, last evening, pursuant to a call, for the purpose of considering the propriety of rescinding a certain resolution adopted at the last meeting. This resolution authorised the secretaries of the different district organisations to act as inspectors at the primary meeting to be held to-morrow night, and to certify with the other officers to the credentials of the delegates who should be elected to the County Convention, to be held on Thursday night. The object of the resolution was to prevent the sending of Tammany men to the Convention from certain districts and thereby pack the Convention in the interest of the Ring—the ultimate issue being whether the Convention should nominate a separate ticket for City and County officers at the coming election, and thereby aid in the election of the Ring candidates, or whether they should coalesce with the reform Democracy and aid in breaking up the "Ring." Of course this was an important question for Tammany Hall, and accordingly TWEED, SWEENY & Co. have been active for the past week in taking measures to control the action of the Committee last night. By the liberal use of money, and profuse promises of office to renegade Republicans, they succeeded, as will be seen, in securing a majority of ten or twelve, who resorted to every kind of parliamentary and unparliamentary tactics to carry their point, overriding the by-laws of the General Committee and the decisions of the Chairman made in accordance therewith. So far, the meeting last night is to be considered a triumph of the Tammany Ring, for which such men as "Hank" SMITH, BEN. MANIERRE, and one or two other trading Republicans are to be held mainly responsible.

The meeting was called to order by Mr. HUGH GARDINER, the First Vice-President, the President, Gen. JOHN COCHRANE, being absent. After the roll had been called, the credentials of Mr. JAMES BRETT were presented and read as a delegate elected in place of DORMAN B. EATON. This gave rise to much excitement, several members declaring that no vacancy existed in the Assembly district delegation of which Mr. EATON was a member. It was contended also that the Committee at its last meeting excused all absentees from attendance, many of them being out of the State temporarily, and that Mr. EATON being in Europe for his health is would be dangerous to declare his seat vacant. Mr. DANIEL D. CONOVER stated that the vacancy existed nevertheless, and that Mr. BRETT was elected at the last meeting of the Assembly District Association to fill it. The Chair decided that no vacancy existed; or at least that this, being a special meeting, no action could be taken on the credentials. This decision was appealed from by Mr. CONOVER. Mr. CHAS. S. SPENCER inquired if any resignation emanating from Mr. EATON had been filed, and received an answer in the negative. Mr. E. V. GRIDLEY said that one month's notice of the existence of the vacancy in the delegation had been given, as required by the by-laws.

The proceedings were here interrupted by a motion that no one be allowed by the Sergeant-at-Arms to enter the room unless he was a delegate, and that the name of such person and the district he claimed to represent be announced. This was opposed by several members as being contrary to the usual practice of the Committee.

Mr. SINCLAIR moved, as an amendment, that all who were not members of the General Committee be requested to retire to the back part of the room, which motion was carried.

Mr. WM. A. DARLING said that there were numbers of men in the room who did not belong to the General Committee, while delegates holding credentials, and regularly elected, were refused admittance. He moved that Mr. THOMAS W. LEE, a newly elected delegate then outside, be admitted. The motion was rejected.

The ayes and nays were then called on sustaining the decision of the Chair on the propriety of acting on Mr. BRETT'S credentials, and resulted in the Chair being over-ruled—ayes 89, nays 78. This was regarded as a test vote on the question of reconsidering the action taken at the last meeting of the Committee with regard to calling the primaries, and showed a majority in favor of reconsideration. A great deal of commotion ensued. Mr. SPENCER moved that the further consideration of the matter of the removal (he could call it by no other name, he said,) of Mr. EATON be postponed until the Secretary notify that gentleman of the action contemplated by this Committee, and he has had a chance to be heard in his defense. The Chair ruled this and all other motions in to vacancies and newly elected delegates out of order.

Mr. D. D. CONOVER then moved (he having voted in the affirmative) that the action of the last meeting with regard to calling the primaries, be reconsidered. He voted at the last meeting, he said, in the affirmative, and was, therefore, entitled to make this motion.

Mr. A. J. H. DUGANNE said that, in the interest of the Republican Party, and in opposition to the interests of Tammany Hall, he felt constrained to move that the Committee do now adjourn. This announcement created a storm of applause, mingled with cries of "Oh! oh!" and the meeting was for a short time the scene of great confusion. The ayes and nays were demanded on Mr. DUGANNE'S motion, and resulted in its being defeated—ayes 66, nays 80. Mr. MATHEW STEWART, of the Second District, when his name was called, said that only this very day he had been offered a position under the Tammany Ring if he would consent to do their dirty work in this committee meeting to-night.

A VOICE.—Why didn't you take it?

Mr. STEWART—Because I am not a traitor. I have been to the war; I fought against Tammany's adherents on Southern soil, and as an honest Republican I can't afford in conscience to sell myself to Tammany Hall now. I vote aye. [Applause; cries of "Oh! Oh!" and great confusion.]

When the result declaring that the Committee would not adjourn was announced there was another attempt made by Mr. CONOVER to bring up his motion to reconsider the action of last meeting.

Mr. FAGOT, of the Twenty-first District, said that a motion to reconsider was made at the last meeting, and voted down; and that, therefore, this motion was not in order.

Mr. DUGANNE and several others—"That's so! The motion is altogether out of order."

The minutes of the last meeting were then referred to, and from them it appeared that Mr. PINCKNEY, of the Fourteenth District, did make a motion to reconsider, which was lost.

Mr. SINCLAIR COUSEY contended that Mr. PINCKNEY'S motion, at the last meeting, was simply with regard to reconsidering a certain specified part of the resolution as to the places for holding the primary in certain districts; but that Mr. CONOVER'S motion was to reconsider the action taken with regard to the subject in its entirety, and it therefore was in order.

The Chair sustained the motion to reconsider out of order, which decision was appealed from, and after much discussion, and attempts to stave off a vote, the yeas and nays were called on the appeal, and the Chair was not sustained.

Mr. DUGANNE again moved to adjourn, upon which motion the yeas and nays were again called, and the motion was lost.

A delegate here suggested that as the Tammany Party were not thoroughly drilled in the lesson they had received, Mr. TWEED had better be sent for to settle the matter.

Mr. R. F. ANDREWS—I suggest that in place of Mr. TWEED the gentleman's Democratic friend, JIMMY O'BRIEN, be sent for. [Applause and confusion.]

Mr. CONOVER then moved the previous question on his motion to reconsider, when Mr. DUGANNE again put in a motion for adjournment, saying, "Are we to be thus choked down by Tammany Hall?"

The Chair sustained the motion to adjourn, and an appeal was again taken, resulting in the Chair being not sustained—yeas 70, nays 77.

Mr. DUGANNE then moved to lay the motion of Mr. CONOVER, to reconsider, on the table, which was lost—yeas 67, nays 79.

Mr. DUGANNE next moved to adjourn till Thursday evening at 8 o'clock.

The Chair decided this motion out of order, as the Committee had twice voted not to adjourn.

Collector MURPHY corrected the Chair. The former motion was to adjourn, simply; this motion was to adjourn to a certain specified time, and that a motion to adjourn, varying the hour, the day or the week, was always in order.

The Chair acknowledged took this view of the matter and declared Mr. DUGANNE'S motion in order.

Mr. SPENCER moved a call of the house. Several members here rose to their feet, and the noise grew uproarious. All sorts of motions were made, and no one was recognized by the chair. In the hubbub, recognition of any particular delegate was impossible. At least forty men were clamoring at once, and confusion reigned supreme.

At last Mr. RUFUS F. ANDREWS said: "We have had about ten test votes, and all were one way. Gentlemen are guilty of small quibble in attempting to keep this Committee here all night, with no result ensuing."

Mr. SPENCER'S motion for a call of the house was overruled, and he then moved to go into Executive session, which was declared out of order.

Mr. E. V. GRIDLEY renewed the motion for the previous question on the motion to reconsider; but Mr. DUGANNE again moved an adjournment, and the Chair declared that it took precedence of the motion to reconsider. The yeas and nays were again called, and the Committee decided (it being now 11¼ o'clock) not to adjourn.

Mr. SPENCER said that these discussions were distracting to the Committee, and directly hostile to the Republican interest.

At this point of the proceedings the utmost confusion prevailed, and a general rush was made for the space directly in front of the Chairman's desk. A disturbance appeared imminent, and the Police in the body of the hall rushed forward with the intention of preventing it.

Mr. SPENCER—We cannot vote here under Police intimidation. Here they are round with clubs over our heads.

CHAIRMAN—The Police are here to protect us all, and I am glad of it, for it seemed to me some of you may need them.

Col. DUGANNE—We are voting under two ranks of Police brought here to intimidate us.

The Chairman directed the Police to retire and the debate was resumed amid renewed confusion.

Mr. RITTERBRAND finally moved that the Chairman be instructed to put the motion, "Shall the previous question now put on Mr. CONOVER'S [motion be reconsidered," and that no business shall be entered until the vote be taken on the previous question, and then upon the motion of Mr. CONOVER to reconsider.

Mr. SPENCER said it was now past 12 o'clock, and he moved as an amendment that in respect for the Sabbath the meeting adjourn. [Derisive cheers.] The question was then put to the meeting.

Mr. LAWSON—I decline to act as teller in consequence of this being Sunday.

The resolution was finally adopted by a majority of 86 to 85.

Col. DUGANNE—I protest against the action this evening, on this ground, first, that the rule governing the Committee has been over-ridden; secondly, that the call was not legal, and thirdly, that this meeting was called for Saturday night, and the vote has been taken Sunday morning.

Col. DUGANNE, Mr. SPENCER, Collector MURPHY and upward of fifty-five members then left the hall amid ironical cheers from the majority.

The previous question was now put to the meeting and carried, seventy-five voting for it and four against.

Mr. CONOVER—Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the call, that the words "Secretaries of the respective associations shall attest the various certificates of elections, and serve as Inspectors appointed by the President as Inspectors of Election," be stricken out of the resolution adopted at the last meeting.

The resolution was adopted almost unanimously.

Mr. T. STEWART—Now, gentlemen, a word with reference to the charges made against us this evening by the gentlemen who have just left the room. I am here for the success of the Republican Party, and in order to make it successful, I am willing to take within our fold the Young Democracy, Tammany Hall, or any other party that will come to us. [Cheers.] I want it to be understood here that although I am in favor of striking from the roll-call the Secretary's citing certificates of election authorising them to act as inspectors, I also stand here ready to take within the fold any party, no matter who they are, provided they can promote our success to any extent in the coming election.

Mr. CONOVER, in reply to the charge made against their party that evening, denied having any connection, direct or indirect, with Tammany Hall, or that he ever received or was offered anything for his influence by Mr. TWEED, and remarked that the purpose of these insinuations was to cause a division in the Republican Party for private ends.

Mr. ANDREWS also denied having been in the pay of Tammany Hall, and scouted all intentions hostile to the Republican Party.

A motion was unanimously resolved that a committee of twenty-one from the different districts be appointed to ratify the State and County nominations.

The proceedings, at 1 o'clock this morning, terminated.

MASSACHUSETTS REPUBLICANS.

Republican Rally in Faneuil Hall—Speeches by Senator Sumner, Senator Wilson, Gen. Hawley, Dr. George B. Loring and Mr. James H. Harris—An Enthusiastic Demonstration.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

BOSTON, Oct. 15.—The Republicans of this city and its vicinity held their first rally of the campaign, this evening, in Faneuil Hall, for the purpose of ratifying the nominations made at Worcester last week. The Hall was not packed, as in the days when the annual election was an annual fight, but it was filled, and the enthusiasm of the assembly was real and sometimes boisterous. It has been a good many years since the people of Boston, or, indeed, of any city within the State limits, have had the pleasure of hearing the voices of both the Massachusetts Senators at the same meeting, and the fact that both were to speak this evening attracted a good many who would otherwise have stayed away. At the hour named for the opening of the meeting Hon. ALBERT J. WRIGHT called the assemblage to order and introduced as the presiding officer of the evening Hon. CHARLES SUMNER, who was received with prolonged applause and hearty cheers. On taking the chair he addressed the meeting as follows:

SPEECH OF SENATOR SUMNER.

FELLOW-CITIZENS: In opening this meeting to-night I am impressed by one thought, which I would have uppermost on the minds of the people. It is the necessity of incessant, persevering activity in support of republican principles, and of the party which maintains them. And here let me say, that republican principles cannot be adequately supported without supporting the Republican Party. There is no issue justifying opposition to the Republican Party—which, if it fails to do all that good men desire, yet does more than can be accomplished through any other political organization. Therefore do I declare—Stand by the Republican Party. Make it united and vigorous. There must be no hesitation, or listlessness, or desertion. Our majorities in Massachusetts are large, but so are our responsibilities. From the historic character of the Commonwealth—from the position it has occupied in the warfare with slavery, and from its fame as the home of ideas, we cannot afford to be sluggish or indifferent; nor can we break up into disjointed squads. It is not enough if we give a majority sufficient to elect our candidates. We must make the majority commanding, controlling, so as to be an example and a power in the land. Massachusetts ideas and interests are to be maintained, not merely here at home, but in the nation. Besides State officers, we choose, at this election, members of Congress and a Legislature which will elect a Senator of the United States. Therefore must we regard our duties to the nation, the first of which is to make Massachusetts the bulwark of the national cause. I know no good reason why Gov. CLAFLIN should not be re-elected unanimously, or at least without opposition outside the Democratic Party, which is against him more from force of habit, I take it, than anything else. As for others who do not assume the name of Democrats, they can find no excuse of habit in voting against him. Then comes the Republican candidates for Congress, who, like the Governor, are entitled to your best support. Faneuil Hall is now thronged with the constituents of Mr. HOOPER and Mr. TWICHELL, who know their services, so that my testimony is not needed. I will only say, fortunate the district with representatives having their character, ability and business capacity. In choosing a Legislature you will not forget my colleague, with his life-long devotion to the slave, his hard work against the rebellion and his practical labors ever since. I would add one further word in reply to those who insist that the Republican Party has done its work and therefore may die. Nothing more absurd. It has done a great and ever-memorable work, but much remains to be done. It has put down a terrible rebellion waged by slaveholders; it has abolished slavery; it has secured equal rights at the ballot-box and in Courts, without distinction of color, and it has reconstructed the rebel States on the solid foundation of the Declaration of Independence. Besides these heroic achievements, which cannot be forgotten so long as men throb in sympathy with human rights, the Republican Party has provided homesteads for the needy; it has built a Pacific Railroad, bringing two oceans together; it has, by honest payment, reduced the enormous national debt entailed by the rebellion, and, at the same time, it has reduced taxation. If a political party is to be judged by what it has done, then has the Republican Party fairly earned your votes. But there is another reason for your continued support. The whole work of reconstruction and the establishment of equal rights is still disputed and assailed by the Democratic [illegible] and [illegible] and [illegible] orators, showing how they still hold out. Repudiators of the national debt, they would repudiate all that has been done for the national Union, and for that equality before the law, which is one of our greatest triumphs and safeguards. This is enough. Until this new form of repudiation is extinguished, there is need of the Republican Party. So long as anybody assails the Declaration of Independence, the Republican Party cannot cease its patriotic labors. It is foolish to imagine that this great party, consecrated to human rights, can die. It will live as long as people cherish those sublime truths declared by our fathers, of which it is the representative and guardian. Its special work will be always to stand by the nation in its unity and by the people in their rights. For such a party there can be no decay. Men whom I now address may grow old, but the Republican Party will be ever young.

The speech by Mr. SUMNER was interrupted by frequent outbursts of applause, great enthusiasm being awakened when the names of the candidates were mentioned.

SPEECH OF GEN. HAWLEY.

At the close of his remarks he introduced Gen. HAWLEY, of Connecticut, who was warmly received, and spoke in substance as follows:

We are here to-night to show why you should vote for the Republican Party. This party is now in power and will continue to hold its position. I look to their party platform and to their Press. I should not look to Massachusetts for these facts, for the Democratic Party has been so much in the minority here that it has not adapted itself to the tasks of the people. I should naturally and justly look to the Democratic Party in New-York for answer to these questions, and to the platform of the party there, because the Democracy in this State have accepted the New-York platform. They say the present Federal Administration fails to command public confidence. The country generally rests in comparative quiet, and why? Because there is a general respect for the Administration and confidence for its future. The resolutions of the New-York platform declare further that the Republican Party is unable to manage wisely the financial affairs. I simply point to the effect of the present foreign war on the price of gold, to the credit of the country abroad and to the reduction of the national debt. The Democracy dooms to ask for an abolition of the national banks and an issue of legal tenders, and even would support the inflation of the currency. They would tax the United States bonds, and this in the face of the decision of the Supreme Court that these bonds cannot be taxed. The Republican Party, then, having reduced the debt and taxation, having raised the national credit, can be compared with the Democracy which will repudiate the debt, tax the bonds and inflate the currency. We have already stricken off the most burdensome of the taxes. The speaker then alluded to the article in the platform on the tariff question, saying that the policy of the party was to attack existing legislation without feeling obliged to put forth their own projects. If they pursue this policy as announced they are no longer free-traders. He did not believe there was enough in the tariff question to divide the country politically. The Democrats made the first grant of land to aid in the entire American people favored the Pacific Railroad, and the offer of the Government went begging for many a year before it was taken up. He then took up in turn and conclusively answered the Democratic charges of lack of sympathy with Cuba, and recalled that plank in the New-York platform which says that the differences between the parties for the last ten years are all settled.

Loud applause followed the conclusion of his remarks.

SPEECH OF SENATOR WILSON.

Senator SUMNER having been called away, Judge RUSSELL took the chair and introduced Senator WILSON.

The Senator said he was thankful that we have a party which carried America onward and upward during the last thirty years. We have been right, and the Democrats were wrong every time. Today we have the President, Congress, and the Supreme Court, and we intend to keep them all. The opposition to our principles shall die out in the hearts of the men who compose the Democratic Party before I dare trust the Government in their hands.

Cheers and loud applause followed, amid which Hon. JAMES H. HARRIS, of North Carolina, was introduced. He referred to the Republican defeat in his State, and said the Republicans were confident and hopeful. That election was nothing more than the rebellion over again. The Kuklux Klan extends over all the Southern States, and kept at least ten thousand loyal voters in our State away from the polls. The only political salvation for the South is the success of the Republican Party. It has cost the life of many a Republican to go to the polls and vote. Not a dozen negroes in the State voted the Democratic ticket of their own accord, and if the Republicans succeed the Democratic Party will never receive the negro vote at all. They do not forget when they are now called colored gentlemen, they remember when they were black rascals with no souls. The Democrats hate liberty and the Government of the United States.

Many of the gallery spectators were ladies, who shared in the hearty but orderly enthusiasm of the evening.

MISCELLANEOUS LOCAL POLITICS.

Tammany Republicans in the Twenty-first District Association.

The Twenty-first Assembly District Union Republican Association met at the corner of One Hundred and Nineteenth-street and Third-avenue, last evening. Mr. WM. H. DE CAMP presided. The hall was "packed" with the friends of the Tammany Ring. Policemen in uniform and in citizens' dress were also present in large force, as were also members of the Fire Department, led by Engineer WM. BANHAM, Jr. The Chairman decided that it was impossible to overhaul the records of the Association for the last nine months to determine who had been elected members, but he held that a man who was previously a Democrat could change his mind in a day, and hence was eligible for membership. Dr. THOMAS, a Police Surgeon, who is a Tammany Republican, offered a resolution to the effect that the removal of JOSEPH S. DEWEY from the Custom-house, is detrimental to the interests of the Republican Party.

Col KRETZMIR held that the resolution was an insult to the Collector, and an attempt to interfere with his duties. A vote upon the resolution was called for, and after the yeas and nays were given the Tammany men called for a standing vote. The Secretary persisted in counting outsiders who were on the affirmative side. At the close of the meeting the Tammany Republicans held a disgraceful caucus in regard to the primary election.

Queens County Politics—Mr. C. C. Norvell Nominated in the First Congressional District by the Republicans.

The Republican Convention for the nomination of a candidate for the First Congressional District, comprising the Counties of Richmond, Queens and Suffolk, was held at the Pearsall House, Jamaica, yesterday afternoon. The Convention was called to order by the Chairman of the last Convention, Hon. H. W. EASTMAN. GEORGE F. CARMEN, of Suffolk, was made Chairman; Dr. W. JONS, of Richmond, and J. M. CLARK, of Queens, Secretaries. On the presentation of the credentials, it appearing that the delegations of Suffolk and Queens were not full, it was voted that each of these delegations have power to cast the full vote of their counties. F. F. MCDAVIS, of Richmond, presented the name of C. C. NORVELL, of Richmond, as a candidate for nomination, making, at the same time, a few appropriate remarks. The nomination was seconded by Col. A. M. WOOD, after which it was moved by N. D. PETTY, of Suffolk, that the nomination of C. C. NORVELL, as the Republican candidate for Congress, be made by acclamation, which was carried without a dissenting vote. Some remarks were made by Mr. NORVELL and by GEORGE WILLIAM CURTIS, after which the Convention adjourned.

Political Brevities.

The Seventh Assembly District Union Republican Association met at No. 106 Sixth-avenue. Col. F. A. CONKLING was elected President. The Executive Committee presented a report naming candidates for election as delegates to the county, Congressional and Assembly Conventions, and the CURRENT LITERATURE.

MY BABES IN THE WOOD.

BY MRS. S. M. B. PIATT.

I know a story, fairer, dimmer, sadder,
Than any story painted in your books.
You are so glad? It will not make you gladder;
Yet listen, with your pretty restless looks.

"Is it a Fairy Story?" Well, half fairy—
At least it dates far back as fairies do,
And seems to me as beautiful and airy;
Yet half, perhaps the fairy half, is true.

You had a baby sister and a brother,
Two very dainty people, rosy white,
Sweeter than all things else except each other!
Older yet younger—gone from human sight!

And I, who loved them, and shall love them ever,
And think with yearning tears how each light hand
Crept toward bright bloom and berries—I shall never Know how I lost them. Do you understand?

Poor slightly golden heads! I think I missed them,
First in some dreamy, piteous, doubtful way;
But when and where with lingering lips I kissed them,
My gradual parting, I can never say.

Sometimes I fancy that they may have perished
In shadowy quiet of wet rocks and moss,
Near paths whose very pebbles I have cherished,
For their small sakes, since my most bitter loss.

I fancy, too, that they were softly covered
By robins, out of apple flowers they knew,
Whose nursing wings in far home sunshine hovered,
Before the timid world had dropped the dew.

Their names were—what yours are. At this you wonder.
Their pictures are—your own, as you have seen;
And my bird-buried darlings, hidden under
Lost leaves—why, it is your dead selves I mean!

OUR LITERARY LODGER.

"Why, John, what do you think! There's a gentleman here who wants us to let him have lodgings for a week or two."

Such was the piece of intelligence with which my wife greeted me one morning on my return from the station, where I had been to see off a lot of eggs; and though the announcement was a very simple one in itself, the circumstances of the case justified the comical smile with which she made it.

Castledown Dairy Farm was very well as a place of business, but for a person not engaged in its business, it would, in a general way, have been thought anything but a desirable lodging. It was only a mile and a half from Castledown proper, while villas detached and semi-detached straggled out to within a very short distance of it; and when the wind was our way, so also was the smoke from several brick-fields and factories. It was not, therefore, in the best sense of the term, but only in the respect that it was separated from the town and its conveniencies by a number of narrow dirty lanes, that our place could be said to be in the country. To a lodger it would have offered the disadvantages of both town and country life, without the compensating pleasures of either; and even had all this been otherwise, the keeping of a lodger was a thing that had never been dreamt of in the philosophy of our domestic arrangements.

Such being the state of affairs, I was naturally astonished by my wife's information, and could only echo, "Wants us to let him have lodgings"!

"Yes," she said, still smiling; "did you ever?" And then, before I could say whether or not I ever did, she went on: "But come in and see him, for his mind seems bent on it; and he said he would wait for you."

"Why, where have you left him?" I asked; my surprise giving place to alarm, as visions of "clever robberies" and "ingenious methods of swindling" rushed to my mind.

"In the parlor," she answered; and the next instant I was opening the door of that apartment, fully expecting either to find the predatory bird flown, or to take him redhanded in the act of spoliation.

But no! there he sat calmly reading Bell's Messenger, and a glance assured me that the cash-box was in its usual place on the top of the drawers, and the other movable goods and chattels of the apartment undisturbed. Nor was the appearance of our unexpected visitor at all in keeping with the popular idea of a burglar. He was not a "determined-looking fellow;" he did not sport "aggrawater" curls, and his dress did not consist of a velveteen shooting-jacket, cord breeches and heavy ankle-jacks. On the contrary, he was a stout, pleasant-looking man, with a plump, rosy, smiling face, and a military-like carriage; he was nicely dressed in a suit of not too glossy black, and upon the whole presented an appearance suggestive of his being a moderately well-to-do commercial man.

It was therefore with a relieved mind that, having returned my visitor's "good-morning," I prepared to dismiss him.

"I understand," I commenced, "that you wish to have a lodging here; but I'm afraid—"

"I know there are difficulties in the way of your accommodating me," he said, calmly gliding into the conversation as I came to a momentary pause; "your good lady has told me all about that, but I think I can put the matter to you in a light that will, in a great measure, obviate these difficulties."

Rightly interpreting the incredulous smile and shake of the head with which I received this statement, he resumed, "I should only require the lodgings for a few weeks, and would not, like most lodgers, require attendance, or to have my meals at stated times, or anything of that kind. The fact is," he went on, lowering his voice, and assuming a confidential manner, "I am connected with a branch of literature, and am at present engaged upon a work which I wish to finish by a certain date. I came into this neighborhood intending to go right into the country; but upon reflection, I think a place near a town, and yet out of the heart of it, would be better; and, as I was strolling by here, it struck me that that upper room of yours, with its little diamond-paned window (as pronounced by you), would be the exact thing for me. I see it commands a nice view, and it is, I suppose, pretty well out of the general bustle of the house?"

Now my hero-worship chiefly goes out toward the literary profession, a small literary lion being greater to me than a larger one of another species, and my visitor's statement touching upon this chord, disposed me to treat with him. But while, on the one hand, proud visions of my being able to point out my little back sitting-room as the apartment in which a great work had been written floated through my mind, I could not altogether get rid of the idea that this stranger might be an adventurer on felonious purpose bent.

It was consequently in a somewhat hesitating tone that I answered: "Well, if under the circumstances you like to put up with such limited accommodation as we can offer you, I shall be happy to place the room at your disposal; but you must excuse me saying that I should require a reference before doing so."

"O, most decidedly," he said, smiling. "I had thought of that, and can refer you to Mr. Harrison, your superintendent of police; he is an old friend of mine, and will be happy to guarantee that I will not afford a case of robbery from furnished lodgings."

"His will certainly be a satisfactory reference," I laughingly answered.

"Well, then," said my visitor, putting on his hat, "we'll consider the matter settled. I'll bring Mr. Harrison down with me in the evening, and as to terms, I'll leave them with you."

In the evening he accordingly returned, accompanied with the Superintendent, who informed my wife and me that Mr. Anderson—for that we found was the name of the gentleman who was to be our lodger for the next few weeks—was a very nice and very clever man, and withal a homely, unaffected one, who would give us very little trouble; and on trial we found that he fully merited his friend's recommendation. He took his meals with us, and was a most desirable table companion. He seemed to know something of everything, and to have seen every variety of social life; he had an entertaining information-conveying style of conversation, and was specially great in apropos anecdote. And while his table-talk satisfied us of his being agreeable and clever, the fact that we seldom heard or saw anything of him, except at meal-times, is sufficient evidence that he gave us very little trouble. Most of his time was spent in the upper room he had himself chosen, and with the view from which he appeared to be particularly pleased, often assuring us, with a quiet chuckle, that it afforded him both amusement and pleasure, though for my own part, I had always considered the view in question a very commonplace one; the foreground consisting of the not particularly well laid-out garden and grounds of a neighboring villa, and the distant view, made up of a number of town-like looking meadows, with here and there a small patch of stunted woodland. In the evenings he would sometimes take a walk about the lanes or into the town; and on Sundays Mr. Harrison or some friend who had run down from London, would come to see him.

"And how is your work progressing, Mr. Anderson?" I usually asked when we met at breakfast.

"Well, not at all satisfactory as yet," he had answered during the first few days, "but I daresay I shall get along better soon."

And so indeed he did; for at the end of a week he replied to my inquiry, "O cespitally; much better than I expected. I am getting my information together rapidly, and expect I shall finish in a week or two."

In this general way he would talk freely enough about the work on which he was engaged, but he had never said anything as to its specific character. One morning, on my putting out a feeler on this point, he answered very vaguely, and took an early opportunity of changing the subject, by asking, as he glanced through the open window at an invalid carriage which at that moment passed down the lane, "Who is that poor gentlemen? I often see him being drawn about the lane."

"What that," said my wife, with the elevation of tone and eyebrows with which people tell you of any circumstance they had taken it for granted everybody must have been acquainted with—"why that," she exclaimed, "is the master of Compensation Hall, the garden of which you overlook from your room window."

"Compensation Hall?" said Anderson with a puzzled look.

"Well, its owner christened it Myrtle Lodge," she said, laughing; "but it is known to local fame as Compensation Hall."

"And thereby hangs a tale, I suppose," said Anderson, seeing that my more talkative half was only waiting for the excuse of a question to say something further.

"Well, not much of a one," she answered; "only that the property was bought and the house built with money obtained from a railway, by way of compensation for injuries sustained on their line."

"That makes the popular title of the place a very appropriate one," said Anderson; and then, as it was evident my wife had still something to say, he observed in a questioning tone, "The man was disabled for life, I suppose?"

"Well, he said he was, and indeed appeared to be so until he had secured the money, and then he recovered with amazing rapidity," she answered, relieving her mind of what she had from the first wanted to say; for between us and Mr. Slater, the owner and occupier of Compensation Hall, there was no love lost. As a neighbor he was too much of a Sir Giles Overreach to be pleasant. When he bought his property he wished to include in the purchase one of the fields belonging to our establishment, but, as it was very necessary to us, we refused to give up our lease. For this we incurred the enmity of the aggressive Slater, who shot our fowls if by chance they strayed within his boundary lines, and had publicly announced his intention of "laving" us if he could get the slightest opportunity of doing so; a threat which in his case really had some meaning in it, for he was, with good cause, fond of going to law, as, unlike most outsiders, he had found it very profitable.

"In cases of this kind," said Anderson, laughingly, replying to my wife's last observation, "the effects of a golden salve are often very remarkable."

"Well, what might appear strange in relation to an ordinary individual, would, to those who know Mr. Slater, seem quite matters of course in connection with him," I said, joining in the conversation for the first time since it had turned upon Compensation Hall and its tenant. "We of Castletown can truly say that he is one of our most remarkable men; and just now he happens to be specially remarkable 'in this connection,' as he has a compensation action pending against the London and Home Counties Railway."

"O, now I see," said Anderson; "it is owing to this second accident that he is in his present helpless condition, or else I was thinking that his recovery had not been such a very brilliant one after all."

"Why, you don't think I would speak of a man who had lost the use of his limbs as recovered?" said my wife, in a slightly indignant tone.

"Well, I didn't know what your ideas on the subject might be," replied Anderson, laughing good-humoredly; "even that might be a comparative recovery, you know."

"O, but Mr. Slater's recovery after he had secured the compensation wasn't comparative," said my wife, falling in with Anderson's slightly bantering tone; "and it was very brilliant, being alike rapid, complete and unexpected."

"Of course I sit convinced," said Anderson in the same light tone; and then turning to me asked, "What sort of a fellow is he in a general way?"

"Well, as I can't say any good of him," I answered with a shrug, "I had perhaps better not speak about him at all."

"Keep your tongue from evil-speaking, by all means," said Anderson, laughing; "but you see it pays me to study character, and it is merely as a student in that line, and from your having spoken of him as a remarkable man, that I asked what manner of man this Mr. Slater is; and looking at the matter in this light, I do not think there can be any harm in discussing him."

As I had no objection to offer to this view, we accordingly did discuss my neighbor at considerable length, though the substance of our discourse may here be more briefly put in narrative form.

Mr. Slater was a man of whom it might be said, with literal truth, that he was much better known than respected, the general opinion regarding him being that, though he might not in a legal sense be a criminal, he was, in point of fact, something very like a scoundrel. Even his friends were fain to confess that he was a sharp blade and not given to stick at trifles; and it is scarcely an exaggeration to say that

"He knew himself a villain, but he deemed
The rest no better than the thing he seemed."

He constantly asserted that the only way to get on in the world was to do everybody, and take care that nobody did you; and he put this principle into practice with a degree of consistency worthy of a better cause. He had come a stranger to Castletown eight years before the time of which I am writing, and set up as a provision dealer: and it is only fair to say that he conducted his business in an energetic go-ahead way that soon brought him a good share of custom. When he had fairly settled down in the town he devoted himself to local politics, and having first distinguished himself in municipal affairs, he succeeded in establishing himself as the leading resident election agent of one of the great political parties. At the first parliamentary election that took place after he had attained this position, he was strongly suspected of having acted upon his principle of doing everybody by sticking to the lion's share of a large sum that had been intrusted to him for the purposes of bribery. But on the Castletown Chronicle publishing a 'scathing' leader upon his conduct in this matter, he had "lawed" the proprietor for libel, and those who could have proved the case of the paper not daring to come into the witness-box, the imprudent proprietor was cast in £100 damages and the costs of the action. Stung by the ingratitude of his party, in attributing their defeat upon this occasion to his having pocketed the money that was to have convinced the free and independent electors of the superior fitness of their (the party's) candidate, Mr. Slater, at the succeeding election, turned round, and though he failed to place the party on whose side he then fought at the head of the poll, he gave them such information as subsequently enabled them to unseat the candidate who did head it. By this time Mr. Slater's character was too well known for it to be supposed that he "ratted," and gave service and information to his former political foes, without receiving some substantial consideration; but people were now very cautious what they said on this subject, and the Chronicle, when alluding to it, was discreetly vague and general. But though, owing to these circumstances, no lawsuit arose out of this second election, Slater shortly afterward achieved a notable triumph in the way of "laving," as he actually gained a verdict against a local solicitor who had made some uncomplimentary, and, as it proved, legally libelous, remarks anent a purchase of house property in which, though Slater acknowledged, or rather boasted, he had "bested" a poor widow, he had not been guilty of absolute fraud. Later had come the successful compensation action of which my wife had spoken, and now he had a similar action pending in which he had laid the damages at £5,000. So that, all things considered, I think I was justified in regarding Mr. Slater's threat to "law" me as no meaningless one: while Castletown in general was equally gratified in regarding him as one of its most remarkable, if not most creditable men.

After this semi-confidential conversation, Anderson and I got upon more familiar terms, and on the following Sunday evening he asked me to join him for an hour in his own room. He was in his best conversational vein, and sometimes while talking he would pace up and down the room, occasionally pausing for a moment to take a look out through the open window. During one of these pauses he suddenly turned to me, softly exclaiming:

"By Jove, you were right in saying your neighbor was a remarkable man! Just look here."

Approaching the window—which has already been incidentally mentioned as overlooking the garden-grounds of Compensation Hall, the boundary-wall of which was on this side only separated from our house by a narrow lane—and following the direction of Anderson's glance, I beheld a most astonishing sight. Close under the wall stood Slater's invalid-carriage, while pacing up and down beside it, with quick, impatient strides, was the supposed helpless cripple, accompanied by his medical adviser, a Doctor Mason, who had been brought from London to attend him. I was about to give vent to an exclamation expressive of my surprise, when Anderson pulled me to the side of the window, softly saying:

"Keep in the shade, and don't make a noise; we shall hear something presently."

The Doctor and his remarkable patient were earnestly engaged in conversation, and as the evident excitement and impatience of the latter increased, his voice grew louder. At first an indistinct murmur was all we heard, but as we stood listening, intelligible scraps of their talk reached us. First came a number of impatient exclamations of the "O bother!" and "Don't tell me!" kind from Slater. Then the Doctor, losing patience at something his companion had said, hotly exclaimed:

"Oh, that's all very dashing, but is it safe?"

"Safe!" echoed Slater, with a good deal of contempt in his tone. "Well, it's as safe as I can afford to make it; you're all for safety, but in a game like this you must play boldly as well as safely if you mean to pull it off."

The Doctor made some brief reply to this in a lower tone; and then Slater, pausing in his walk, broke out again,

"Pull it off! why of course I'll pull it off, if you'll only pitch it in strong enough! I shan't get all I ask, I dare say; but if I only get half, it'll be pretty well; and when I've collared the ready over this, I'll sell up hereabout and get up to London once more, and go in for some big thing."

"Well, well, let us hope it'll be all right," said the Doctor; "and now you had better get into your machine again; your man will be here directly."

Acting upon this advice, Slater got into the carriage, and wrapping himself in the rugs was again, to all appearance, in a helpless state when, a few minutes later, the man who had been hired to draw him about came and took him away.

"Well, that beats everything," I said, as we withdrew from the window.

"It's not at all bad," said Anderson laughing; "he ought decidedly to have been an actor; he does the invalid with a naturalness and attention to detail worthy of a true artist."

"There's no disputing his being a clever rogue," I said indignantly; "but the railway company ought to be made aware of this."

"Well, they ought," said Anderson, with a cynical smile; "but I would strongly advise you not to say anything about what you've seen; you would be no match for a fellow of Slater's stamp, and if you interfered, you would probably only give him an opportunity of subsequently 'laving' you, without in the least damaging his present case."

Upon reflection I was brought to acquiesce in this view of the matter, and so concluded to be silent respecting the scene I had witnessed.

On the following Wednesday Anderson took a friendly leave of us, saying that he had finished his work so far as he could do so at present. For a week after his departure he was a constant theme of conversation with my wife and me; but at the end of that time he and all other topics were driven into the background by my receiving a subpœna to appear as a witness for the defendants in the case of Slater vs. the London and Home Counties Railway. I supposed that the company had got some inkling of Slater's general character, and was summoning me by way of trying to show that he was a litigious, overreaching, and not over-scrupulous character; and, so far, I would not have cared. What weighed unpleasantly upon me was the garden scene. Should I be justified in withholding my knowledge of it? And, on the other hand, should I be believed if I told it, not being able to bring forward Anderson to corroborate my evidence, and the fact that I was at enmity with Slater well known? On carefully considering these matters, I came to the conclusion that I would just let things take their course, answering whatever questions were put to me, but volunteering nothing.

Three weeks later the Castletown Assizes commenced, and Slater's was one of the first cases that came on. The counsel opened the plaintiff's case in a very able speech, the gist of which was that his client had lost the use of his limbs—his medical attendant feared permanently, as there had been reason to believe the spine was injured; and that when this calamity, his agony of mind, medical expenses, losses in trade, and the necessity of having to dispose of his business at a sacrifice, in consequence of not being able to attend to it—when all this was considered, the counsel put it, the fact that Slater had laid his damages at only £5,000, proved him to be one of the most considerate of men. Evidence in support of this statement was given by Slater's servants, shopmen, and the doctor; the latter only being cross-examined, when it was elicited that he was not in general practice, and had never been in much practice. He could not swear that the plaintiff would never regain the use of his limbs; but, after some clever fencing, he did swear that he had for the present quite lost the use of them.

The counsel for the defendants commenced his speech by saying, that in cases of this class there was often great exaggeration as to the nature and extent of the injuries sustained; but that in the present case he should be able to show that there had been something much worse than mere exaggeration. The defendants, he stated, having discovered that the present plaintiff had also been the plaintiff in another case of this kind, in which the subsequent physical results were altogether at variance with the personal evidence as to the character of the injuries received, had considered it right to set a watch upon his movements. That they were amply justified in such a proceeding the results—as they would be brought out in evidence—would fully demonstrate. "The first witness I will call," said the counsel, as he sat down, "will be Inspector Gordon, of the London Detective Force."

When the celebrated detective was named, a murmur of mingled surprise and expectation arose in all parts of the Court, and even the barristers seemed to share in the general excitement. The word was passed for the Inspector, who presently entered the witness-box, disclosing to the view of the general body of the spectators a quiet-looking middle-aged man, with nothing particularly striking in his appearance; and to me the astonishing fact that Inspector Gordon and my late lodger were one and the same person.

"It's Anderson!" I involuntarily gasped, as he stepped into the box; and on the subsidence of the indignant "hush" which this excited, he gave me a glance of recognition which dissipated any lingering idea that I still entertained of this being a case of mistaken identity.

All was now as clear to my mind as it has probably before now been to the reader's. Gordon had been intrusted with the case; and recognizing in Slater a gentleman, who under his real name of Watson, had some years before been through his hands for robbing his then employer, a large provision merchant, he determined to watch him closely. He had selected my house as his post of observation, and, as he put it, "taken my measure" from what Mr. Harrison had told him. He had discovered that the seeming cripple was in the habit of taking strong exercise when his family and servants were at church; and his (Gordon's) Sunday visitors had been the solicitor, doctor, and other officials of the company, to whom he showed the curious "garden scene," one performance of which has been described. The evidence that Slater had been shamming was conclusive, and it need scarcely be said that he lost the case. It was generally thought that the railway company would have prosecuted him and his doctor—whom Gordon also recognized as a person who had been in "trouble," but they took no further proceedings in the matter, and as soon as possible after the trial my remarkable neighbor sold Compensation Hall, disposed of his business, and left Castletown to return to it no more. During the joint-stock mania, which set in about this time, rumor reached us of his being actively and profitably connected with some of the largest of the bubble schemes concocted during that period.

"Well, I only got excited after all," said Gordon, laughingly, replying to some remarks made by my wife when he came to see us the day after the trial. "I am connected with a branch of literature—that, to some people, interesting branch, the police intelligence. And I didn't say that I was engaged upon a book, but a work; though I might, without any great stretch, have called it a novel; for, as you know now, it was connected with a criminal scheme, a detective and a rather sensational trial; and most novels nowadays are made up of that sort of thing."—Tinsley's Magazine.

LONGFELLOW'S TABLE TALK.—He spoke of ALEXANDER SMITH and his City Poems, and of GILFILLAN'S early recognition of their author's genius, and expressed deep regret at SMITH'S premature death. AYTOUN he knew chiefly by his Lays of the Scottish Cavaliers. TENNYSON, he said, was exceedingly popular all over America. He showed me a beautiful copy of the Laureate's works that stood among the books on his study table. He spoke of GEORGE MACDONALD, and of Dr. JOHN BROWN, whose Spare Hours (Horæ Subsecivæ) was much admired. "But he is best known," he said, "by some of his shorter pieces. 'Rab and his Friends' is everywhere."

Speaking of international copyright law, he said, "We have done all we could to get such a law passed. You would gain by it even more than we. The difficulty lies with the lower class of publishers and book-sellers here. They cry out against it. But houses like FIELDS' are strongly in its favor, and have lent all their influence to obtain it. My own idea," he added, "is this: Any copyright taken out on the one side should hold on the other; and whenever it expires on the side on which it is taken out it should expire on the other. This, I think would cover the whole ground, and would avoid all difficulty arising from the different lengths of time for which copyright is granted in the two countries."

Of newspapers and journals he said: "Ours are not equal to yours. We have no such classic writing here as you have in the Times, Spectator and Saturday Review. But our standard is rising."

Speaking of the war, he said, "When the Marquis of LORNE was here, I asked him why the English aristocracy were so exultant over the split of our Union. The Marquis said it was the instinct of caste. He was the first nobleman I met, who perceived, or at least, confessed the truth. I was surprised to hear the confession even from him."

He looked at some photographs that I happened to have with me. On coming to CRUIKSHANK'S, he said, sadly, "How changed he is since I first met him at the door of DICKENS' house. It makes me feel old to look at him." He admired a picture of THOMAS CARLYLE, taken by ELLIOT & FRY, but was amused beyond measure at the philosopher's appearance in the handsome cloak which the artist had thrown over his shoulders to give effect to the picture, and over which the face of SARTOR RESARTUS appeared, wearing an expression of ludicrously doleful resignation.

Speaking of Hiawatha and the Indians, I told LONGFELLOW how much I preferred the Indian of romance to the Indian of reality, as far as my experience of him had gone.

He said, "You see no true specimens now. They are all degenerated by contact with white men and by rum. I doubt if there is a pure uncontaminated Indian left on this continent."

He said that the correct pronunciation of Hiawatha was "Hea-wah-tha."

When I spoke of Evangeline, but expressed my doubt if the hexameter would take root in English soil, he said, "I don't know; I think it will. It is a measure that suits all themes. It can fly low like a swallow, and at any moment dart skyward. What fine hexameters we have in the Bible—'Husbands, love your wives, and be not bitter against them.' And that line—'God is gone up with a shout, the Lord with the sound of a trumpet!' Nothing could be grander or finer than that!"

"When I wrote Evangeline" he added, "friends here said, 'It is all very well, but you must take an English metre; that hexameter will never do.' But my thoughts would run into hexameter. However, to please them, I translated some passages into heroic measure; but they agreed, when they heard them together, that the hexameter was best." But whatever might be thought of classic measure for new poems, HOMER and VIRGIL ought, if possible, he said, to be preserved in their native hexameter. Attempts to modernize HOMER, and put him into English metre, were apt to become absurd. It was like putting a statue in crinoline, or converting Achilles into a modern gentleman.—The Americans at Home, by David Macrae, Edinburgh.

INTELLECTUAL CONDITION OF ECUADOR.—Prof. ORTON does not give a very encouraging account of the intellectual condition of Ecuador. He says: "Ecuador boasts one university and eleven colleges, yet the people are not educated. Literature, science, philosophy, law and medicine are only names; there is not a single book-store in the City of Quito, and there are only four newspapers published in the whole of the Republic. In the schools the pupils study in concert aloud, Arab fashion." Yet Prof. ORTON adds that Chili has thought it worth her while lately to sign a convention with Ecuador, "for an exchange of literary productions!"—Nature.

VILLAGE POLITICS IN FRANCE.—Active political preferences the peasant has none. To his monotonous life of labor the substitution of one ruler for another makes very little difference indeed. Here and there, as in Champagne, the "Napoleonic legend" still flourishes, just as Orleanism survives in the commercial towns; but the peasant will not expend a sou for the Imperial dynasty any more than the merchant will raise a hand for the Count of PARIS. What, however, Napoleonism has done for his political education is to arouse in his mind an intense aversion to being governed by the towns. Power has for twenty years rested on the votes of the peasantry, and the peasant can hardly like to see his work overthrown by an émeute in the streets. A Republic means the rule of the shopkeeper, and he hates and envies the shopkeeper. Above all, it is "a government of lawyers," and meshed, as he commonly is, in lawsuits and mortgages, he regards the lawyer as his natural foe. And here he finds himself at one with the sympathies of a class which has still a perceptible influence on rural opinion—the Legitimists. The shabby young Marquis who lounges along the shore of some little Breton watering-place is utterly powerless to obtain what he likes, but it by no means follows that he is powerless to destroy, or at least to induce others to destroy, what he does not like. The Empire was partly of his own making. In his eyes it was a mere usurpation, of course; a mere continuance of the régime of iniquity and fraud which had robbed him and his ancestors of their rents since '89. But still he never repented having helped to make it. In the first place, it made Paris brighter and pleasanter, and his month's fling in Paris is the holiday for which the young Marquis scrapes and starves during the rest of the year. And, in the second place, its hand lay very heavily on the classes who robbed him and his—the bourgeoisie and the ouvrier—the Dantons and Marats and Robespierres of whom he believes the Republican Party to be composed. He could pardon very much to the man who had, to a certain extent, avenged his wrongs, and who had been clever enough to trample under foot the democracy that had ridden over the necks of his ancestors. This was what the Marquis meant when he took his cigarette from his lips and assured you that the Emperor was "très-intelligent." To a Legitimist of this sort the proclamation of a Republic is simply the getting up again of a foe whom he had for the last twenty years seen on the ground with immense satisfaction. He can hardly help being irritated, and, slight as his direct influence is, he can manage in some degree to communicate his irritation to the peasant. The life of the peasant is chained to his bit of land; he is a proprietor, not a politician. Proclamations about a federation of the Latin peoples, declamations against the penalty of death, the rhetoric of VICTOR HUGO, the logic of JULES FAVRE, are all without the slightest meaning or interest to him. So long as those gentlemen of Paris like to amuse themselves with these, he is not likely to stir. So long as his bit of land is safe, Republic or Empire is alike to him. But for twenty years he has been assiduously taught that a Republic means peril to property. To him the red flag means pillage, and, though GAMBETTA has managed for the moment to put it aside, it waits its turn to supersede the tricolor. LOUIS BLANC is a published and quotable name to those who have had the pleasure of his acquaintance in London, but the peasant of France has not had that pleasure, and to him the reappearance of LOUIS BLANC means the reappearance of Communism.—Saturday Review.

AN AUTUMN SONG.

Below the headland with its cedar-plumes
A lapse of spacious water twinkles keen.
An ever-shifting play of gleams and glooms
And flashes of clear green.

The sumac's garnet pennons where I lie
Are mingled with the tansy's faded gold;
Fleet hawks are screaming in the light blue sky;
And fleet airs rushing cold.

The plump peach steals the dying rose's red;
The yellow pippin ripens to its fall:
The dusty grapes, to purple fullness fed,
Droop from the garden wall.

And yet, where rainbow foliage crowns the swamp,
I hear in dreams an April robin sing,
And memory, amid this Autumn pomp,
Strays with the ghost of Spring.

ALEXANDRE DUMAS PERE.

ALEXANDRE DUMAS is a living refutation of those prejudices which would necessarily condemn people of color to intellectual inferiority.

As a writer and as a man, he has won celebrity with a public which is, on some accounts, the most difficult in the world, and moreover has "worn it won" much longer than is usual at Paris, the most fickle of cities. As a dramatist his name will live, if not by its intrinsic merit, at least as personifying a curious period in French theatrical history—a period of literary revolution corresponding in some respects to the political revolution at the close of the last century. As a writer of prose fiction—under this head most of his books of travel, his Impressions de Voyage, must be classed with his romances—he has been read and admired (in spite of his sins against style and truth) throughout Europe and this country. In the book trade no name of modern author has had a higher marketable value than his; while enlightened critics, who lament that he has abused his talent in a shameful variety of ways—especially by degrading literature into a mere trade, and a trade not carried on any too honestly at that—are still ready to acknowledge the decidedly remarkable talent which he has evinced. Carrying into private life the same restless activity which is manifest in his career as an author, he has been able, as a dashing brilliant character, to astonish society incessantly for years; and Parisian society, accustomed as it is to singularities no less multiplex and changeful than the figures of a kaleidoscope, is by no means easily astonished. Yet this person, so distinguished as a writer and a man, belongs to a race that is generally considered by us incapable of those distinctions in literature and society which he has gained, and which public opinion here puts pretty effectually beyond its grasp. ALEXANDRE DUMAS is of mixed blood, the son of a mulatto. His father, Gen. ALEXANDRE DAVY DUMAS, natural son of the Marquis DE LA PAILLETERIE, and a negress, was a native of San Domingo. He was the first colored man who ever reached the grade of General in the French Army. Entering the service in 1786 as a simple dragoon, he rapidly rose by successive promotions till he became General of Division, in 1793. He distinguished himself in the campaigns of Italy and in the campaign of Egypt. Returning from the latter country to France for the sake of his health, he was forced by a storm to put in at Tarento. Here he was seized by the Sicilian Government and thrown into the dungeon, where his numerous wounds festered for two years. Upon his release he was obliged to leave the service, and retiring to Villers-Cotterets, a small town in the Department of the Aisne, he dragged out a languishing existence there until he died in 1807, poor, honest, and regretted by the whole army on account of his noble character and heroic bravery.

It is in this little town of Villers-Cotterets that ALEXANDRE DUMAS was born on the 24th of July, 1803. DUMAS, in the preface to one of his works, has given an autobiography, in which he describes, in his own peculiarly animated manner, the early years of his life. His education was sadly neglected; his mother, who loved him passionately as her only hope, for she was without fortune and had but this son and two daughters, could never bear to be separated from him. He learned little therefore from books, except a few scraps of Latin taught him by the indulgent curate of the parish, who also instructed him in the art of stringing French rhymes together. "As for arithmetic," says he, "three school-masters had successively abandoned the attempt to put the first four rules into my head." By way of compensation, however, he adds, "I possessed the physical advantages which a country education gives; that is to say, I mounted any horse, I used to walk twelve leagues to go and dance at a ball, I was skillful enough in the use of the sabre and pistol, I played tennis like St. George, and at thirty steps I rarely missed a hare or a partridge."

Such were the resources of the young DUMAS when he completed his twentieth year, and learned from a conversation with his weeping mother that after all they had was sold to pay their debts, their remaining fortune would be only two hundred and fifty-two francs, not of interest, but of principal—their all. At least so DUMAS says in his autobiography, although he may perhaps be suspected of having somewhat "dramatized" the history of his affair; for it has been suggested that his mother, being the widow of a general officer, must have received a pension, and therefore could not have been so nearly destitute as her son represents her. However this may have been, the result of the conversation was the departure of ALEXANDRE with the fifty-two francs, which arrived at Paris untouched, for he informs us that before setting off he played a game of billiards with the diligence conductor, and winning enough to pay his fare, saved that much upon his little treasure.

Before he had time to spend the whole of his fifty-two francs he was fortunately installed as a copying clerk in the Secretary's office of the Duke of ORLEANS, with a salary of 1,200 francs a year. This piece of good fortune was owing to a letter of recommendation which he bore from an influential voter to Gen. FOY, the Deputy from his department. Scarcely seated at his desk, ALEXANDRE DUMAS resolved while living by his penmanship to live some day by his pen, and bethought himself seriously of repairing his neglected education. It was at this period that he formed those habits of night labor, which he has since retained, and by which he has been able to mystify some of his acquaintances, who, from seeing him almost as idle as they in the daytime, cannot understand when or how he accomplishes so much. Occupied eight hours during the day at the office, and forced to return there each evening and remain from 7 till 10 o'clock, the nights alone were at his disposal. Soon he takes it into his head to write a tragedy. When it is written he wishes to have it played. He addresses himself to the learned and gifted M. NODIER, whom he does not know from Adam, and begs to be recommended by him to M. TAYLOR, Royal Commissary of the Theatre Francais. M. NODIER hastens to comply with his request. M. TAYLOR receives him kindly, introduces him to the committee, and his tragedy is accepted without opposition. It is true that it is not immediately acted. It is true that DUMAS' efforts to bring about this desired event interfere so seriously with his duties at the office that his superiors, in their dissatisfaction, withhold the accustomed gratuity at the close of the year.

But why should he complain of that? These officials were not bound to discover his talent, and in any case what they needed for their purposes was not a dramatist, but an assiduous copyist. However that may be, M. DUMAS, tired of waiting for the representation of "Christine," makes up his mind to write "Henry III." As soon as it is presented, the drama is played. The Duke of ORLEANS engages the whole of the first gallery, and, accompanied by a battalion of Princes, Princesses, Dukes, Duchesses, Ambassadors and Generals, comes himself to witness the triumph of his copyist. It was a triumph. The next day the unknown young man found himself suddenly transformed into a great personage—into an immortal genius. CORNEILLE and RACINE are eclipsed—"used up." The receipts of "Henry III." yield 30,000 francs to its author. Feasted and received everywhere in Paris, M. ALEXANDRE DUMAS feasts and receives all Paris in return.

As if giddy with his sudden transition from obscurity to glory, we behold him plunging with ardor into boundless luxury: he wears fantastic coats, flashy vests, sports an enormous gold chain, gives the dinners of a Sardanapalus, breaks down never so many horses and loves never so many women. So brilliant was the beginning of DUMAS' career. Is it not difficult to discern in him a man excessively ill-treated by destiny? Success after success has attended him ever since. As a dramatist, he had for years the advantage of keeping the public curiously constantly awake, by dint of pushing to its extreme limits the boldness of the romantic school. He has not only made dramas and melodramas, but he has made comedies, drama-vaudevilles and comic operas. A list of his theatrical productions alone would occupy several pages. Yet it would by no means equal in length the list of the miscellaneous works of history and romance and travel which have appeared under his name. About the year 1835 he published some works of this kind, with such great success that he gave the reins to the marvelous facility of composition which he has received from nature. He has written piles of romances, and feuilletons by hundreds; in the single year 1840, he published twenty-two volumes in octavo. He has written with one hand a history which, with the other, as it were, he "feuilletoned." He has published numerous "Impressions de Voyage," having successively put France, Switzerland, Germany, Italy, (and particularly Florence,) Sicily, Mount Sinai, and Spain, into feuilletons and volumes—in which everything is to be found, drama, elegy, eclogue, idyl, politics, gastronomy, statistics, geography, history, wit—in short, everthing except truth. Never has traveler out-Munchausened Munchausen more boldly, or with more success. He has also written prefaces and introductions without number.

Unfortunately—not for his purse, but for his style, for his best reputation, for the true interests of the public, in fine—unfortunately, Dumas was tempted by the flattering reception of some of his earlier works in prose to lead the way into the ruinous path by which so many pursue literature merely as a trade, in utter forgetfulness of any high motive or aim. Romance-writing, after its irruption into the journals in 1836, became in France la fabrication par excellence—a regular system of manufacturing. Thus ALEXANDRE DUMAS, whose speculations have been conducted on a gigantic scale, has, according to the evidence of the learned bibliographer, M. QUERARD, industriously plied this business at the head of seventy-four collaborators or assistants, turning out dramas, histories and travels, as well as novels, by the wholesale, in such profusion that the market was well-nigh overstocked. He used to order from Paris and forward to Paris from Florence (where he lived for a long time) whole cargoes of literary commodities. When the Roman feuilleton—correctly described as consisting of "fragments of novels continued from day to day," each fragment surpassing its predecessor in the exaggeration of style and incident—was first brought into vogue, the directors of the daily papers almost quarreled in order to secure the assistance of M. DUMAS. Unprecedented contracts were made with him. Some were nearly impossible; and it is not surprising that his alleged failure to comply with them in all points subjected him in 1847 to prosecution. His trial, as well as that of SUE, which took place about the same time, would afford materials for a new chapter in D'ISRAELI'S Curiosities of Literature. An idea can be formed of the engagements of the journals with certain literary celebrities, from the single fact that DUMAS agreed to furnish La Presse yearly, for five years, with eleven volumes of novels, for which he was to receive an annual compensation of 30,000 francs, or $12,600, on condition of withholding from all other publishers all that he should write, except eighty new works, to contain 226,000 lines, which he was in the course of publishing at the date of his new contract. No wonder that he should employ—he certainly needed—assistance in fabricating a quantity of romance to which not even his prolific genius was equal. It is physically impossible for DUMAS to have written all that has been published in his name. He declared, however, at his trial, that on one occasion he did, as he truly observed, what no other man had done before, and what probably none will do after him—he commenced and continued to their conclusion five separate romances, portions of which daily appeared in five different newspapers. Every word in them all, as he called upon his prosecutors to testify, was written by his own hand. But, after all, does this fact prove that he may not have simply returned, in preparing some of the five romances, to his old avocation of copyist? It was certainly, in any case, a remarkable feat, and as he stated, "a man, two horses and a railroad engine were required each day for the transportation of these manuscripts" from his favorite residence at Marly, which is about twelve miles distant from Paris.

Marly, celebrated for its chateau and gardens, erected by LOUIS XIV., and destroyed at the Revolution, was more recently the chosen residence of that highest of all royalties, talent, in the persons of Mlle. RACHEL, Mlle. ANAIS-AUBERT, Messieurs MELESVILLE, DE KERATRY, SAINTINE, ALEX and preserved by the large establishments of the Breton capital. The sardine women sell them fresh, or as nearly fresh as possible—for so very delicate is the fish that it is necessary to salt it as soon as it is caught; and their cry is a wild, high-keyed shriek, and fairly startles you, it is so seemingly painful. Probably there are no harder-working people in the world than these Breton peasant women, whose cries distract one in the early morning. Usually the wives and daughters of suburban farmers, they aid in the tilling and planting of the ground; tend the crops during their growth; gather the fruit and vegetables when they are ripe; load their little carts or heavy baskets, bring them into town, and go hour after hour over the stony streets until they have completed their extensive round, screaming at the top of their lungs, and gathering a few sous with difficulty here and there; then, their hard day's work completed, trudging back with their carts and baskets to their distant country home. There are such workers in that frivolous and unthinking France, which we are apt, from a superficial view only, to believe wholly given over to indolence and dissipation. When you learn with what patient labor these creatures earn their daily bread, you are no longer inclined to lie, mentally denouncing them for disturbing your morning nap; you will, now and then, spend spare pennies upon their wares, and not regret it; for sympathy with the trials of the lowly ennobles, as well as gratifies, the right-feeling man.—GEORGE M. TOWLE, in Harper's Magazine for November.

IN A CUBAN THEATRE.

A call for 7 A. M. would hardly meet with a punctual response were such an announcement posted behind the stage-door of a London theatre; but in Cuba the more important business of the day is transacted during the cool hours of the morning, and it does not surprise Roscius of the West Indies when he finds himself summoned to a theatrical rehearsal some three or four hours before breakfast. After that meal Roscius makes up for lost sleeping-time by taking a long siesta till the hour of dinner.

During rehearsal in the theatre I am describing, the doors are open to the public, and, there being nothing to pay for admission, the stalls and private boxes are always well filled by a not very select audience. Gentlemen of color are not inadmissible on these occasions; hats may be worn at pleasure, and smoking is so far from being strictly prohibited, that manager and actors themselves set the example. I am tempted to stroll into the theatre during rehearsal because it is a refreshing lounge after toiling up the stony, hilly Cuban streets, and because I may gather a new fact or two connected with life behind the Cuban curtain from my friend Tunicú, who is a great authority in matters theatrical. Tunicú resides permanently in the building itself, and is paid for taking care of it by night and by day. He is, besides, scene-painter, property-man, costumier, and a good mimic, often obliging the manager by imitating the bark of a dog, the crow of a cock, or the bray of a donkey behind the wings.

The curtain being raised for rehearsal, discloses the whole strength of a very fair company of Spanish actors. None of them bear the conventional air of strolling players. The men are mustached and fashionably attired, and the women, from leading lady to insignificant super, are elegantly dressed. Apropos of supers, Tunicú assures me it is no easy matter to secure the invaluable services of a genuine white for these purposes. A white lady is not to be had for love or money; and when fairies are required for a burlesque, the children of respectable families are sometimes prevailed upon to appear. Male supers are not so scarce: Spanish soldiers may occasionally be hired; and when these are otherwise engaged, a dozen stage-struck youths of good family volunteer their services as chorus, crowd, or army. The important roles of quadruped and agitated water are filled by negroes, who, in Cuba, are, of course, plentiful as blackberries; but when a real black face is required to figure in the performance, it is represented by a painted mulatto, for Spanish law in Cuba is severe, and prohibits the genuine article from appearing on the stage. The theatre opens four times a week, including Sunday, and the entertainment is varied every night. To-day the company rehearse a local drama, a zarzuela, and a farce called Un Cuarto con dos Camas, being a Spanish version of MORTON's "Double-bedded Room." A famous actor from Spain is the star of the present season. At rehearsal he is a fallen star, being extremely old and shaky, but at night his make-up is wonderful, and he draws large audiences, who witness his great scene of a detected thief in convulsions. The prompter is seated under a cupola in the centre of the stage near the footlights, as at the opera, and his duties are arduous. It devolves upon him to read over the part of each performer in a suppressed tone, and to direct their manner of exit and their position on the stage. He is unseen by the audience, but often heard by them, for the actors have only a faint notion of their parts, and cannot repeat a line at night without having it first hissed at them by their friend at the foot-lights.

Tunicú has much to say upon the subject of censorship of plays in Cuba. A play, he tells me, cannot be acted before it has been first submitted to the Censor, who, empowered by Government, is at liberty to place his red mark of disapproval over any word, line or passage which he may deem offensive to Spanish morality or to Spanish politics. There is no rule attached to this dramatic censorship, and each Censor in every town throughout the island has his own way of passing judgment. Thus, what would suit the politics and morality of Havana, might be considered treasonable and profane at Santiago. A capital comedy is often so mutilated by the Cuban Censor as to be rendered dramatically unfit for representation.

All Cuban buildings are constructed with a provident eye to earthquake and tropical heat, and the theatre is no exception to the rule. The means of egress are speedy and facile, so that in case of emergency the audience may, comparatively speaking, step from their places into the street. On every side are huge open windows and doors, by means of which perfect ventilation is insured. Fire is also carefully provided against, and there is always a small regiment of black bomberos, or firemen, stationed in readiness within the theatre. There are two tiers of private boxes and a gallery. The first tier is but slightly elevated from the pit, enabling the occupants to converse, as is the fashion, with friends in the stalls. Both tiers have the appearance of an ordinary dress-circle, with a low partition to distinguish one box from another. There are wide lobbies at the back, and an ornamental iron grating in front. Like most houses in Cuba, the theatre is without drapery, the stall-seats and box-chairs, which are cane-bottomed, not excepted. The interior of a Cuban theatre is barren as a bull-ring.

Despite my intimacy with Tunicú, I pay my money at the doors before I enter the theatre at night, like everybody else; for in this proud country it is considered humiliating in a respectable person to beg an order or a pass. I accordingly purchase two separate tickets; one for my admission into the theatre, and one for my seat in it; otherwise I should have to stand like the indigent few at the back of the boxes. Tunicú accompanies me for this occasion only, and gives me the names and occupation of most of the audience, whom he seems to know personally. For the matter of that, everybody in a Cuban theatre is on intimate terms with everybody, and there is much conversation between the occupants of the boxes, who are, with few exceptions, ladies, and those of the pit, who are exclusively gentlemen. The señoritas, in low-necked muslin dresses, with a wealth of genuine hair, and with their inevitable fans, form a pleasing frame of fair humanity around the picture of dark coats and white drill trousers in the pit. Their hands are gloveless, and their diminutive fingers are loaded with rings of great value; for Cuban ladies are fond of jewelry, and make a great display of it upon all public occasions. Some of the señoras have brought slave attendants, who crouch in waiting on the ground behind them.

The stout gentleman who occupies that big box all to himself in the centre of the theatre, is his Excellency the President. No Spanish entertainment is complete without its President. The curtain may not rise till his Excellency has taken his seat; the actors may not respond to a call or an encore if the President is not agreeable, and does not flutter the big play-bill before him in token of his acquiescence. The box to the right is the lawful property of the Censor, who, like most Spanish authorities in Cuba, rarely pays for his pleasure. He is extremely affable and condescending with everybody before the curtain, though as stern and unyielding behind the scenes. His daughters, charming young ladies are with him, and flirt freely with the numerous Pollos, as the youth of Cuba are called, who come to pay their homage. His Excellency, the Governor-General, is enthroned in a wide stage-box, and is dressed in full uniform, covered with orders. His Excellency is accompanied by an Aid-de-Camp and half a dozen bronze-faced, heavily-moustached officers, all of whom are more or less laden with orders, crosses, and other military decorations. In the bend of the theatre are the boxes of the English and American Consuls. But what are those mysterious inclosures with trellis-work before them on either side of the proscenium? Those are special private boxes for the use of persons or families who are still in a state of half-mourning, and may not yet expose themselves to public scrutiny. But these boxes are not always occupied by mourners, whispers Tunicú, in great confidence. There are a certain class, he tells me, who wear a kind of half-mourning, which never becomes out of fashion; these are the half-castes, or quadroons, who dare not be seen in public with acknowledged white people. The gallery is as usual devoted to soldiers, sailors and persons of slender means; and in the extreme background are a few benches set apart for the exclusive accommodation of mulatto girls and negroes of both sexes, most of whom are elegantly attired, for colored people are scrupulous in their dress on all public occasions.

After the overture—a medley of Cuban dance music and Spanish fandango, played upon ordinary instruments by black musicians—a big bell, to summon all stragglers to their places, is heard, the curtain is raised, and the performance begins. There is nothing peculiar in a Cuban drama, except that no allusion to political matters is made, and that the profane and immoral are somewhat freely indulged in. The comic players perplex the prompter with mordinate gagging, and delight in personalities with occupants of the orchestra and pit. There is much applause when the comic man shuffles through the charings—a popular negro dance, difficult of performance, and shouts of laughter are produced in the scene between a Yankee, who speaks very broken Spanish, and a lady who speaks Spanish with the approved Cuban accent. It is an enthusiastic and excitable audience.

The entirely new drama is a complete success, owing to the realistic performance of the famous star from old Spain. That gentleman is on the point of breaking a blood-vessel in his effort to impersonate the convulsive thief; but he is saved by the doctor in the private box, who is suddenly summoned to the actor's dressing-room. This interesting incident makes a deep impression upon the sympathising public, and greatly increases the interest of the drama. Then the curtain is lowered amid rapturous applause, and calls for the infirm player, who is presently led on the stage, supported by one of the company and by the doctor. In the following act, the star astonishes his audience by a vivid representation of a detected thief gone mad, and his private convulsions being still fresh in their memories, many are seen to direct their gaze toward the doctor's box, in doubt whether that gentleman will be required to administer also to a mind diseased. But all conjecture on this point is presently set at rest by the acting madman himself, who is duly restored to his histrionic senses at the conclusion of the play.

An interval of from twenty to thirty minutes elapses between each act, during which the whole audience rise from their places and promenade around and about the theatre. The ladies betake themselves to the lobbies to flirt, fan and refresh themselves with ice sorbetes. The gentlemen from the pit are everywhere. Some are conferring with friends in the grilles, or mourning-boxes; some are smoking cigarettes in spacious saloons provided for smokers; others are in the street drinking orchata or bul, a compound of English beer, with iced water and syrup. The stage itself is, however, their favorite resort. Open doors give access to that mysterious ground from the front of the theatre, and the pit public is thus enabled to wander into every nook and corner, from the traps below to the flies above. The players do not shun their visitors, but rather court their society, for a friend in front is considered a desiderable acquisition, and half way toward a reputation as "favorite;" to say nothing of benefit nights at the end of a season. A small crowd of Pollos waylay the first lady as she leaves her dressing-room. As many as conveniently can enter the leading actor's room to congratulate him on his success and his speedy recovery from the sensational scene. Another party of Pollos chokes the narrow passage leading to the premier danseuse's boudoir, and great is their joy when they catch a glimpse of the gauze goddess as she flutters hurriedly past on her way to the green-room. The stage is thronged with these walking gentlemen, who require no rehearsal or prompter, and whose most attractive performance consists in unbounded cigarette smoking, and in getting in everybody's way. It is a miracle how, in the midst of this dire confusion, carpenters, scene-shifters, and managers contrive to set the stage for another act; and what a scene would be disclosed if the drop were to rise prematurely! Presently a voice is heard to cry, "Fuera!" thus being Spanish for "clear the stage;" the big bell tolls, and the audience in due course return to their places in front. The curtain having been drawn up after the drama, a man comes round, like a ticket-collector on a railway, to demand the cards of reserved seats from their holders, and to distribute programmes for to-morrow's performances. Everybody is in turn disturbed and annoyed, for at that moment the low-comedy man is singing a comic parody, in a farce called the "Sexton and the Widow."

But there is a graver interruption than that caused by the ticket-collector. An interruption which affects actors as well as audience, rendering everybody within the theatre walls motionless and speechless. Some ladies are seen to cross themselves devoutly, and are heard to utter ejaculations about Misericordia and Maria Santisima. Every door in the theatre is thrown wide open, and the servants of the establishment stand before them with lighted candles. What is amiss? I look for Tunicú, but he has disappeared. Fire? The black bombero firemen are in their accustomed places, and exhibit no sign that such a catastrophe has occurred. Rebellious outbreak of runaway niggers? I glance at the military box, and find the occupants peacefully inclined. Earthquake? I look toward the doctor's box, and observe that nervous gentleman perfectly tranquil and unmoved. Hark! a tinkling bell is ringing somewhere outside the theatre. From my position in the stalls I can see into the open street beyond, and anon I descry a procession of church dignitaries in full canonicals, the first of whom bears the tinkling bell, while the rest carry long wax candles, the Host, and the sacred umbrella. Their mission at this hour of the evening is that of administering the holy sacrament to a dying man, and as they pass along the streets, it behoves all occupants of houses within the route devoutly to acknowledge the procession as it passes. The audience and actors accordingly kneel and cross themselves while the holy functionaries and their sacrament are in view. One of the ecclesiastical party enters the theatre and glances hurriedly within to see that all are in the approved attitude. I am thankful to find myself doing as the good Catholics are doing, for I know that our visitor has no respect of persons or creeds, and would call me to order without the least hesitation were I incited to rebel. When the religious function in the street (all public shows, from a bull-fight to high mass, are called funcions in the Spanish language) is out of sight and hearing, the candles at the door are extinguished, the spectators resume their seats, and the farce funcion on the stage proceeds.—All the Year Round.

CATHERINE DE MEDICIS.—CATHERINE DE MEDICIS led the revelries, the fashions and the politics of the age. Her youth had been singularly unfortunate. No friendly voice, no fond or tender counsels, had awakened in her cold heart a trace of filial or maternal love. Her father, LORENZO DE MEDICIS, had deserved by his vices the miseries he endured; her mother was no less unhappy; and CATHERINE, the descendant of the wealthiest mercantile house in Europe, was born penniless and a child of evil omen. It was foretold of her at her birth that she would bring destruction to the city where she was born; the towns-people of Florence would have exposed the infant in a basket to the balls of their enemies. But she was preserved alive, was shut up in a convent, and in the school of MACCHIAVELLI and of Rome learned dissimulation and self-control. Her uncle became Pope, and FRANCIS I., anxious to win the support of CLEMENT, married his son HENRY to the portionless orphan, then a girl of fourteen. But misfortune still followed the child of evil omen. The Pope [illegible] died; FRANCIS

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

People whose propensities and social training give them a fondness for beer, will be interested in learning that the hop-vines of the North-west are covered with lice this season, thousands of which are picked off with the hops, and will form an important ingredient in the beer soon to flow into the Eastern market. Whether this will make that inspiring liquid better or worse is a question yet to be decided. There can be little doubt that it will be quite as lively as that produced merely from the vegetable hop, and there is good reason to believe that it will have additional nutritious properties. It might be worth while for those self-sacrificing individuals, the scientists, to take hold of it first, and if, after a thorough trial, they pronounce it to be a wholesome beverage, the rest of mankind can visit the concert-gardens with less misgiving.

We have heard of the peculiarities and eccentricities of "Jersey justice" on this side of the ocean, but the exploits of our comparatively respectable neighbor in the administration of law fall far short in brilliancy of those of its insular namesake which is peopled by the "toilers of the sea." A very respectable old gentleman named TIERNEY had the misfortune, very common the world over, to have a son who chose not to follow in his honorable footsteps, but betook himself to irregular courses, and finally brought up as bad boys are likely to do, before a Magistrate, charged with robbery. The venerable father, sufficiently afflicted, one would think, by the disgrace of his offspring, was banished and the crime recorded against him because he did not prevent it, although no evidence was given or required that he was cognizant of the offense at all. The Island of Jersey seems to need light on the principles of justice as adopted by civilized nations.

Men have a variety of ways of testifying their devotion to a great and good cause, or to a small and bad one, as the case may be. The most truly Hibernian of all that we have heard of is that of a company of Fenians in Savannah, who held a meeting a short time ago, and after a long preamble on the charms of old Ireland, and the virtues of her noble sons, adopted a resolution to contribute of their substance for the erection of a monument to the memory of O'DONOVAN ROSSA's mother. Of the many excellent qualities of that respectable old lady we have no knowledge, any more than the filial Fenians had who adopted this disinterested resolution, and we presume that the funds which Irish laborers must contribute to the Fenian cause or be unhappy, could not be better appropriated. It is certainly better than to have the officers of the Brotherhood appropriate them to their own use.

Inventing derivations for words is a very safe and satisfactory proceeding if the inventor is quite certain that the real origin of the word is not known to more intelligent people than himself. Many a classical scholar has gained credit for profound erudition by the exercise of this kind of ingenuity on the dead languages, but when living tongues are dealt with in the same way there is considerable danger that the would-be scholar will succeed only in exposing his own ignorance. Massachusetts once had a very shrewd political manager in Mr. ELDRIDGE GERRY, a name not unknown to fame and recorded among the signers of our national Constitution. This astute politician, when his State was divided into representative districts, so contrived the matter as to secure a goodly majority of representatives for his own party. This ingenious and statesmanlike process came to be known as Gerrymandering, and to this is owing a large share of the fame of Mr. GERRY, which has descended to posterity. In a recent number of one of the most respectable of London journals we find an elaborate article on the art of "Jerrymandering," in which we are told the Americans have long been adepts, and which we are also gravely informed derives its name from one "Col. JEREMIAH MANDER," who had "shown considerable ability in the practice." What will the GERRY family think of having their traditional glory disposed of in this manner?

The capabilities of the African race are not half developed yet, but there are some of the duties of good and valuable citizens in which they are by no means behindhand. We are told of an old negro of Mobile, Ala., who stands erect under the weight of eighty-seven Winters, and an equal number of the less rigorous seasons, in the proud consciousness that in that comparatively moderate period of time he has become the husband of seven wives, and the father of forty-one children. There can be no doubt that one of the wants of a great country is a supply of efficient fathers, and that Benedick was quite correct in his conclusion that the world must be peopled, but at the same time there should be a limit to this sort of thing, and we are of opinion that the "inferior race" has reached quite a satisfactory development in this direction, if this Mobile patriarch be accepted as the standard.

If it were not for the many interesting traits of character exhibited by dogs, snakes, fishes and other intelligent subjects of the animal kingdom, our story-tellers would be deprived of an invaluable store of material. The latest "remarkable dog story" appears in an Iowa paper. It would appear from the "faithful chronicler's" narrative, that a teamster of Davenport possessed a watch-dog, whose strong, though wayward affections, proved fatal to all his worldly prospects. To make use of a new quotation, "he loved not wisely, but too well," and the object of his attachment was one of his master's horses. Whether these two noble animals were wont to hold sweet communings together in their unromantic stable, or whether the sentimental canine, for lack of a common language, "never told his love," we cannot know, but true it is, that, when the horse died, "only a few short weeks ago," his ardent adorer refused to be comforted, and laid down by the cold corpse and died of grief and starvation.

The Prussian officers around the battlements of Metz seem to find time and opportunity for the joyful occasions of this life, and even think of marrying and giving in marriage amid the scenes of carnage and slaughter. A very pleasant little episode is related of Lieut. VON PAPEN, of the Fifteenth Infantry, who received a severe wound at the battle of Gravelotte, on the 18th of August. The news reaching his faithful betrothed in Westphalia, she immediately set out to attend him in what was supposed to be his last hours. Her gentle ministration, however, rescued the gallant officer from the brink of the grave, and in less than a month from the day when he was struck down in the midst of a terrible battle, their nuptials were celebrated, the military chaplain officiating on the happy occasion. The young Lieutenant is still far from completely recovered, but has found a "kind physician," who will, no doubt, effect a perfect cure.

Notwithstanding the many immunities and exemptions from the rougher responsibilities of life which are allowed to the gentler sex, we have plenty of instances of their aspiring to the loftier sphere into which only masculine spirits can be admitted. It has heretofore been regarded as an altogether hopeless ambition, but there seems at length to be some small chance for the poor unfortunates whom nature neglected to furnish with a beard and the other prerogatives of manhood. The Dorchester County, Maryland, News says that a daughter of Mr. STACK, of Fredericksburg, recently set out for Philadelphia in male attire. She soon afterward returned home, but refused to resume her cast-off feminine habiliments, insisting, in the face of the incredulity of her own parents, that she was a man. The editor, who tells the story seriously, adopts the conclusion that there was a bona fide change of sex, which, he says, is attested by the growth of a mustache, a piece of evidence one would hardly dare dispute.

Social standing, rightly considered, is a great thing, and very desirable to have, even for a man occupying an [illegible] position; but while there are so many different standards for judging of a man's standing in society, possibly he may be pardoned for doubting the [illegible]

Disraeli the Younger.

From the Boston Transcript, Oct. 13.

Looking over a file of the Transcript, our eyes fell on the following paragraph under date of Sept. 9, 1847. In view of the subsequent history of the distinguished publicist to whom it refers, it will be found to possess a great deal of added interest to day:

"THE AUTHOR OF 'VIVIAN GREY.'—There was a good deal of opposition to young DISRAELI in Buckinghamshire at the recent English elections. But he seems to have stood his ground manfully, and refused to be put down either by demagogue or saint. It is the custom of candidates when the High Sheriff declares them elected, to make their addresses to the electors and declare what they will do. Hisses and groans saluted DISRAELI when so doing; and as he began to speak there were loud cries of 'Oh!' and 'Ah!'—the ejaculators of which DISRAELI denounced on the spot as 'gaping orators,' 'melodious owls,' &c.—whose most brilliant rhetoric is a bowl, and whose happiest repartee is a hiss,' &c., &c. Further on, a scene like this occurred, (some one in the crowd having bawled out to him 'speak quick!')

'Speak quick!' retorted DISRAELI. 'It is very easy for you to speak quick, when you only utter a sound inconceivable. [Loud cheers and laughter.] But when I speak I must measure my words. I have to open your great thick head. [Laughter.] What I speak is to enlighten you. If I bawl like you, you will leave the place as ignorant as you entered it.' [Renewed laughter.]

This scene is quite equal to some with which our stump orators at the West are familiar. But we doubt whether any of them could have stood his ground better than did the author of Vivian Grey.

FINE ARTS.

Effect of the War—New Pictures and Sculpture—Le Jugement de Paris—Specimens by Rosa Bonheur, Meissonier, Boughton, Tadema, Achenbach. Zamacois and Others.

The war has, of course, had the effect of stopping the importation of French pictures, with the exception of such as were in other countries when communication between Paris and the rest of the world was cut off. It has been rumored that several private collections of pictures were transferred from Paris to Belgium and England soon after the war commenced, but dealers here who were in Paris up to the commencement of hostilities say that it is very doubtful whether any such precautions were taken, as the Parisians were too confident of victory to think such transfers at all necessary. Until, therefore, the hosts now assembled round beleaguered Paris disperse, or are dispersed, French pictures are likely to be very scarce in the market. But if we cannot have pictures, we are, it seems, to have artists. ROSA BONHEUR, GEROME, MEISSONIER, GALANT, GAINTIN, and others of lesser note are already in London, and will doubtless pay a visit to this country. ROSA BONHEUR, we believe, has long contemplated such a visit for the purpose of studying the wild cattle of our prairies, and GAINTIN, who was here a few years ago, has long expressed his intention of renewing his acquaintance with this Western World and its people.

NEW PICTURES.

There are few painters who can invest a simple landscape with the interest which KOEK-KOEK contrived to throw into his. A finer specimen of this master than the one now on exhibition at the Schaus Gallery, in Broadway, it has not been our lot to see, and we doubt whether one exists. Admirable in color and perspective, and truthful in its adherence to the forms of nature, it strikes the spectator at once as a composition of no ordinary merit; and yet how simple it is. A few grand old trees with knotted trunks and spreading foliage, a well-worn path beneath, a few cattle, a peasant girl, a dog, and in the distance a glimpse of sky and mountains, on which falls the radiance of an unclouded sun. The picture, though painted some years ago, is fresh as if just from the easel. In the same gallery is F. WILLEM's "Le Jugement de Paris." The painter has modernized the story. Enone, telling of her wrongs, says:

"Then to the bower they came—
Naked they came to that smooth-swarded bower,
And at their feet the crocus brake like fire,
Violet, amarious and asphodel,
Lotos and lillies.
On the tree-top a crested peacock lit,
And o'er them flowed a golden cloud."

We have nought of all this save, perhaps, the cloud and the peacock. Instead of the Queen-like Juno, Pallas and Idalian Aphrodite, "fresh as the foam new bathed in Paphian wells," we have three stately court beauties, one dark, two fair, and for "beautiful Paris, evil-hearted Paris, coming from sooty Simois all alone," we have the Court Jester, a little sturdy fellow, all in red. The scene is laid in the court-yard of a palace. The three beauties have just descended the steps, the traditional peacock is perched on the railings, and the jester, apple in hand, is gravely considering to which of the three ladies he shall give it. The dark one is drawn up to her full height, and is evidently of the opinion that there should be no doubt whatever as to whom the apple belongs. The fair one on the right is by no means so haughty or so confident. Between them peeps a face younger, fresher and lovelier than either, and to which we should certainly award the coveted prize were we the little man in red. The expressions are finely rendered. The flesh coloring is perhaps a little cold. The attitudes are natural and dignified, and the draperies, for it must be understood that unlike the goddesses our beauties are fully clothed, admirably painted. The textures, indeed, are rendered with surpassing skill, yet this portion of the picture is, as it should be, subordinated to the more important parts. The painting was intended for the grand exhibition at Paris, but, we believe, was not finished in time. It is an admirable specimen of WILLEM's style. Very different to this in treatment are two pictures by ZAMACOIS—a water-color, representing a court jester leaning against a wall, and "The Decoration." The first is distinguished by all this painter's well-known brilliancy as a colorist. The second represents a young and handsome man attired in court costume, who has just received a decoration and is admiring it and himself at the same time in a mirror. The color is well subdued. The face is a trifle hard, but the attitude is admirable, and the accessories painted with wonderful skill. Among the landscapes is a fine specimen of JANSEN's, "The Via Mala," truthful in form and color. In the same gallery we also notice two cherubs' heads protruding from a window, cut in marble by Miss E. WHITNEY, of this City, at present studying in Rome. The idea is a pretty one, and the execution, if not very strong, shows careful and conscientious study.

THE GOUPIL GALLERY.

On Monday, this gallery, which has been closed for a few days, will reopen with a brilliant display of pictures of recent importation and a few by native artists. Occupying the place of honor is Mr. M. J. HEADE's recently-finished "Mountain Scenery in Jamaica." The picture is about the same size as that painted by Mr. CHURCH for Mrs. COZZ, of Hartford, and strongly resembles it in outline. The treatment, however, is very different. It has none of the striking effects or brilliancy of color that Mr. CHURCH's picture possesses, but at the same time is [illegible] tropical luxuriance of vegetation with which Mr. CHURCH loves to adorn his foregrounds is not here. In place of it we have a few rocks, palm trees, and half a dozen figures, the last somewhat carelessly thrown in. The color, too, is somewhat cold for tropical scenery. The light and shade are, however, well massed, the perspective good, and the general effect harmonious and striking. It is, doubtless, a very faithful and conscientious representation of a scene somewhat difficult to put on canvas. Were the color less subdued, it might be classed as one of the finest pictures produced here this season. In the same gallery we notice a Scotch scene by ROSA BONHEUR—half a dozen sheep grazing on a mountain top. The animals have all the variety of expression and attitude with which this artist knows so well how to invest her creations. Near by is G. H. BOUGHTON's "Breton Peasant Girls." This is a favorite subject with Mr. BOUGHTON. Two girls, followed by a boy, are just returning from the fields. At the road-side graze a few sheep, watched over by a shepherd and his dog. The faces of all, dog included, are sad, and seem to tell of much work and hard fare. It is, doubtless, a true representation of peasant life seen under its less roseate aspects. The color, as usual with Mr. BOUGHTON's pictures, is very cold. In quite different style to this is BOUTIBONNE's "Broken Heart." A young lady, pale and weeping, is lying in her mother's arms. In her hand are a broken chain and locket. The face expresses all the grief of one who has loved and lost. At a piano is seated another lady. The composition has all the brilliancy of color and skillful painting of details which BOUTIBONNE's pictures invariably possess, but its principal fault lies in the absence of interest shown by the other actors in the principal figure. A lady rising on a violet-colored glove, by BOUGUEREAU, is in his best style. The face is lovely, though somewhat stern and proud. From L. KNAUS we have two peasant children, raking up the grass which the father, who stands on the hill-side above, has just mown. The figures of both children are admirable, and the expression of the girl's face most sweet and innocent. The perspective of the figure on the hill, however, seems to be hardly correct. A moonlight scene, by ACHENBACH, and the interior of a guard-room, by P. C. COMTE, will also attract attention. The details of dress and the attitude of the two sleepy soldiers in the latter painting are admirably given. The color, too, is wonderfully truthful. By PECRUS, SEIGNAC, VIBERT, VON MEYER and other favorites, we have numerous examples. Also one by W. AMBERG—a gentleman and his dog seated in the wood, waiting the approach of two ladies. It has all the depth of feeling and carelessness of detail which distinguishes this artist's works. We must not pass over "Going to Church," by a young Belgian artist, now famous, ALMA TADEMA. His pictures are held at fabulous prices in London, and this is the first ever brought to this country. It represents a lady accompanied by a lovely boy, and followed by her chaplain, entering a church. The expression of religious devotion on each face is finely rendered. From MEISSONIER we have a "Soldier of the King's Guard," stern and handsome and brilliantly attired. SCHREYER sends a large picture representing a horse tied up outside a gypsey's tent, and shrinking from the night wind which blows across the desolate country in the back-ground. It is strongly and finely painted, but with more attention to detail than SCHREYER usually devotes to his paintings. The expression and attitude of the animal are finely rendered. Above we have but glanced at the most striking pictures. Many others will be found perhaps equally worthy of notice to those we have mentioned, and among them MOELER's (a Western artist) "Just Moved." The subject is not a very pleasing one, but the expressions are good and the details well given.

A SUNKEN LAKE.

One of the Natural Wonders of the Thunder Bay Region.

We extract the following from Prof. N. H. WINCHELL's recent report on the Thunder Bay region:

Sunken Lake, in Sec. 32, T. 33, N. R. 6 E, is a remarkable example of the effect of subterranean erosion. I have before described the lake in full. Suffice it to say that the North Branch of Thunder Bay River disappears entirely in time of low water beneath a ledge of Hamilton limestone. But in time of high water, the mouth of the subterranean channel will not admit the raised volume of water, and after filling the basin of a little lake, which is nearly a mile in length, it passes overland through the channel represented as its bed on the maps. During half the year, however, this channel is one day south of the lake.

During a recent trip up the Lake Huron shore, north of Thunder Bay, it was one of my objects to examine the reported outlet of this river into Lake Huron. On the south side, and near the head of the deep, crooked bayou, tributary to Little Thunder Bay on the north, is a remarkably deep hole in the otherwise shallow bed of the bay. The entrance of this long arm of Little Thunder Bay is disguised by a long, low island which hangs across it. Any one in coasting would be apt to miss it, as I did at first, unless he followed carefully the same indentures of the coast. Having entered the bayou, I directed my man to follow the right bank, or north side, and to return on the south shore. Having entered the bay, we began to coast outward along the south shore. We had left the head of the bayou, perhaps 150 rods, when there was a sudden increase in the depth of the water. The weeds which had covered the bottom entirely disappeared within a space no more than the length of the boat, and the water was as black as at any place in the open lake. The motion the boat had attained carried us over the chasm, and my pocket thermometer told us the temperature of the water was 67° Fahrenheit. As that was the same as the temperature of the shoal water of the bayou, observed a few minutes before, I was disappointed, for I had expected to detect the presence of river water, if it were the outlet of Sunken Lake, by the difference of temperature between the lake water and that of the water rising from the opening. Pushing the boat astern, we followed the rim of the basin round toward the right, and found the descent very abrupt in all places. The shoal water was filled with weeds, which are common in inland lakes and slow and flowing streams, and they were seen to cover the brink and follow down the steep side as far as the eye could distinguish. When the boat reached the east side of the opening, the weeds were seen to rapidly diminish, and they soon entirely disappeared. The brink here was very steep, almost perpendicular, and consisted of sand, with considerable number of fractured shells. Our boat stopped upon the brink at this place, and upon proceeding to make another observation on the temperature of the water, what was our surprise to find that we were slowly drifting away from the opening. It was further observed that we were in motion against the breeze which was passing up the bayou. I was again surprised to find that the temperature of the water was 65° Fahrenheit. This observation was made perhaps ten feet to the east of the opening, and as we were drifting, allowing the boat to continue in motion, the temperature at thirty feet from the opening was 65° Fahrenheit. The depth of the water at the place of these last observations was not more than eighteen or twenty inches, and the bottom was one of clean sand with frequent shells common on the lake beach near the mouth of rivers, but no weeds. Returning to the opening and following the line of shoal water in the same direction, we found that the weeds soon became as abundant as on the other side of the current. The current ceased soon after we passed the most eastward or lakeward side.

The opening is six or eight rods across, and nearly circular, and is nearest the south side of the bayou, about twelve rods from the shore. As one passes over the brink and loses sight of the weeds as they descend so quickly down the unctuous brink, a feeling of terror comes over the beholder, as if he was about to be precipitated into an awful chasm. Fishermen report that a lead has been lowered 300 feet into its opening without a bottom. I suppose the temperature of the water over the opening is higher than that of the current just east, because of the influx of the heated bayou water, and that the real river water is found just over the sandy part of the brink, and a little further east. It was not until I left the place that I remembered that the temperature of the Thunder Bay River at Alpena, at two different observations, was 52° Fahrenheit. In Winter this is always free from ice, and ducks frequent the place. I have no doubt but this is the real outlet of the north branch of Thunder Bay River, which disappears in the bed of Sunken Lake.

Two Illustrious Soldiers—Uhrich and Steinmetz.

From the London Daily News, Oct. 2.

Two brave soldiers, whose names have been conspicuous in the war, retire this week from the foreground—UHRICH, from Strasbourg, to live on his parole in Switzerland; and STEINMETZ, from before Metz, to a civil Government in Prussia. Since UHRICH's name became famous, countries have contended for the honor of giving him birth, the last statement being that he is a Sclavonian. But he was born, so the Alsatian journals assured us six weeks ago, in Phalsbourg, in 1802. He was educated at St. Cyr, and by the second year of the Crimean War had risen to the rank of General of division. Three years are he retired from active service, but at the outbreak of the war he came forward to serve his country, and was appointed to the command of Strasbourg. He is married to a German lady, and during the siege his younger children have been with their mother's relatives in Baden. STEINMETZ, the old "Lion of Skaitza," is a soldier of the Blucher type, hungry for battle, who gets a decent dismissal because he could not keep his appetite under strict control. Whenever STEINMETZ saw the enemy, he could not help hitting him. But "smite hard and smite always" is not a maxim that commends itself to Generals of the school of Count MOLTKE, who do not like to have their large and wise combination marred by the premature action of subordinates. It is said that more than once, when MOLTKE was executing a plan of operations on the principle so successfully applied at Sedan, his order of STEINMETZ carried him away, and by attacking too soon he reduced a whole victory to half a one. As STEINMETZ was Commander-in-Chief of the Army, there was no alternative but to maintain him in his position or to send him home, and the latter alternative had been adopted. He need not complain;

he has had part in some of the greatest battles of the century. A man who began by fighting at Leipsic, and commanded an army at Gravellotte, may be content by this time to put up his sword.

Of the library of Strasbourg, nothing but ruined walls and a few pieces of charred paper remain. The picture gallery and theatre are entirely destroyed. Two large districts—the Faubourg de Pierres and the Faubourg National—are in ruins. The deaths caused by bombardment among the civil population were at the rate of ten daily.

Owing to the difficulty of getting letters from Paris and to that capital during the present state of things, a few enterprising individuals were preparing to start a post of their own. It has been intimated to them that when the siege has commenced, any one found conveying a letter out of Paris will be shot on the spot. The scheme is no longer to their liking.

NEWS OF THE DAY.

THE WAR.

It is rumored at Tours that the large force of Prussians before Orleans have surrendered to the French with all their artillery. No particulars are received and there is consequently much excitement. M. KERATRY, the Chief of Police, who escaped from Paris on Thursday in a balloon, reports that the sortie of the 13th was a splendid affair. The Prussians sustained considerable loss, and their batteries were dismounted. Yesterday a body of Franc-Tireurs attacked a squad of Wurtemburg cavalry in the forest of Fontainebleau, and drove them to Melun, where the Prussian garrison retreated and a large amount of provisions and stores fell into the hands of the French.

Conflicting reports are received of the courage of the Parisians. A Paris correspondent of the London Standard says that there is no lack of courage there; and adds, "on my honor, the Prussians can never get in; another, of the London Post, declares that it is all sham heroism, and the Government is as blustering, weak and incompetent as the people; and M. GAMBETTA has issued a proclamation citing the new evidence of courage just given by the Parisians. Meanwhile it is pretty certain that work is constantly going on in the defenses within the city, and preparations making to resist whatever attacks are made. A deserter from Metz reports that bread and salt are entirely exhausted there, but there is still an apparent plenty of other provisions. The formal siege of Soissons and Verdun are begun, and the bombardment of New-Breisach continues with vigor. The result of the first day's bombardment of the latter is given as seven killed, twenty-one wounded and ten buildings burned.

Our London correspondent declares that Gen. BURNSIDE will succeed only in getting three Americans safely out of Paris, who yet remain there. BISMARCK insists on the cession of Alsace and Lorraine, and JULES FAVRE declares that the nation shall perish before it shall yield to such conditions. A dispatch from Tours asserts that negotiations looking to peace are still going on actively, and indicates that something is yet expected of Gen. BURNSIDE'S mission. The Government has sent a circular to its representatives abroad, refuting by historical proof BISMARCK'S argument, that liberal France had ever desired conquest or worked against German unity.

Our London correspondent telegraphs that no more trouble is feared in Paris from the Socialists. Our Havre correspondent notes the arrival of 14,000 Springfield rifles by the Lafayette, from New-York. The Irish ambulance corps has also arrived, and the belief is expressed that when opportunity is offered it will take its share in the fighting. The London Times calls on the Government to enforce the Enlistment act against Irishmen departing for the purpose of entering the French service. Our correspondent at Rouen states that there will be a great scarcity of food this Winter, not only in France but throughout Europe, and supply will be anxiously looked for from America.

The Republican Traitors.

The men who claim to belong to the Republican Party, and who are in reality its bitterest enemies, met last evening to do the bidding of their real masters—TWEED, SWEENY, and HALL. People may think that it required no slight degree of impudence for any man calling himself a Republican to stand up on a platform, at a time like the present, and attempt to paralyze the action of the party at the instigation of those enemies to public decency and order, the Tammany "Ring." But some allowance must be made for their position. They are wearing the livery of the enemy and eating his bread. They are under a compact to do the bidding of TWEED & Co., and they must either do it or be turned out of office. TWEED'S lash over their back is a good deal more terrible to them than fears of public contempt; and as for self-respect, they cannot very well lose what they never had. With Mr. TWEED'S chains clanking upon their wrists, they could scarcely be expected to show a spark of manliness, much less to worry themselves about considerations of fidelity to party. They look upon politics simply as a means of earning a dishonest livelihood, and upon the public as a poor, spiritless, incapable entity, warranted to submit to any outrages which unprincipled conspirators may choose to inflict upon it. They behaved according to their kind last night. Mr. DANIEL D. CONOVER was the fugleman, and Mr. TWEED doubtless stood somewhere behind the door to keep his lackeys up to the mark.

It is quite clear, not to mince the matter, that all the notoriously corrupt Republicans ought to have been kicked out of the party long ago. They have brought nothing but discredit upon it—they have crippled every effort to reform abuses, and have even made promised reforms a pretense for putting themselves and their dependents in office under Tammany—just as Mr. NATHANIEL SANDS, the Mr. Facing-Both-Ways of the day, has contrived to do. While Republicans in the rest of the State have been striving to do their duty, these Tammany hirelings have only been anxious to find an opportunity for betraying our camp into the hands of the enemy. If the system which has nurtured them had been abolished some time ago, this great City would not now be at the mercy of reckless plunderers, Gov. HOFFMAN would not have been enabled to pack the Bench with dishonest Judges, and Mr. JAMES FISK would not insult public decency every day, at the expense of the Erie shareholders. There is a remedy for every source of dissension and weakness in the Republican Party, except this one. A business man can manage his affairs very well so long as his partner is not betraying him to a rival. Any open danger it is easy to face, but the snake in the grass is always likely to be troublesome. The only way is to try to make an end of him, and this course of treatment must be adopted with the Republicans who have sold themselves out and out to TWEED and his accomplices. After our recent experience, we hope there will be no hesitation in dealing sharply with MANIERRE, "HANK" SMITH, "RUFE" ANDREWS, and all their fellow-renegades, big and little. Men who wear the Tammany badge must be placed beyond the reach of bringing shame and disgrace upon the Republican Party.

Ought Neutrals to Export Arms to a Belligerent?

Our readers, without doubt, perused with interest the telegraphic dispatch from London in a recent issue of this journal, giving in detail the demands of Count BERNSTORFF upon the British Government, as to the observance of neutrality between the combatants. One can only say of them that if they are not legal demands, they ought to be. International law is a code of comparatively modern birth. It is simply a set of precedents and customs between nations, resting on the principles of justice and common sense. These customs or rules have grown up through the exigencies of the case, and have been confirmed by practice, and finally have been incorporated, in part, in treaties between various Powers, and in municipal legislation. Many of the principles lying at the foundation of them have not even yet been fairly settled, and the practice of different nations differs somewhat from one another.

Thus the French and Continental view, as might be expected, has urged the rights and protection of neutrals to a greater extent than have the British authorities. And till recent times the United States have always upheld the claims of neutrals more than those of belligerents. To add to the uncertainty in regard to international law, there is no final Court of appeal to adjudicate on its doubtful points, and no penalty for its violation. It is true that the legislation of, for instance, this country and Great Britain, and their subsequent practice, have perhaps definitely settled certain mooted points in the law of nations as between them. It is also true that the recent treaties of the European Powers have apparently fixed certain great customs in the dealings of nations at war, both toward themselves and neutrals. Still, even as respects these points, a thousand side questions arise which no one can settle, and when belligerents violate the international agreements they have entered into, there is no power to punish them.

If Germany, at this time, should choose to forget the Treaty of Paris, and commission privateers against French commerce, there is no penalty to attach to the measure except the reproach of public bad faith. One of the grand future conquests of civilization and Christianity, perhaps a century hence, and equal in its effects on human progress to any civil institution ever devised, will be an "International Court" between nations, pledged to adjudicate, to legislate, and to punish. Such a Court would do more to prevent wars, and to mitigate the horrors and injustices of existing wars, than any expedient ever devised by the wit of man.

Among the doubtful questions not yet fully decided in international law, is that about "contraband of war," which is now so earnestly debated between Lord GRANVILLE and Count BERNSTORFF. The principle at the bottom of the proposition in regard to contraband is, that it is not just that a neutral Power should aid in carrying on a war with a Power with which it is at peace, and where it incurs none of the risks of war. Accordingly it is recognised by nearly all authorities that exports of arms, powder, and other material of war, by a neutral Power for the use of a belligerent are forbidden, and are liable to seizure; the right of a belligerent to seize them resulting from his right to prevent military aid being given to his opponent. The neutral, on the other hand, has his rights. Lord GRANVILLE will probably say to the Prussian Ambassador, that a belligerent has no right to cut off all neutral commerce, and, though private exports of arms may support the other belligerent, they are a portion of neutral commerce, carried on at the risk of the parties engaged. Our own Government and the British have been consistent in this principle, that the private export, as a commercial transaction of arms and munitions of war, is not a hostile act by the neutral, but simply the export of contraband at the risk of the individual owner. If the belligerent finds it, he can seize it, and the neutral merchants must lose the cargo. The British dealt with the South during the rebellion on this basis, and both this country and England are now exporting arms to France, under this custom or rule. The British factories, it is said, have already sent out 160,000 fire arms to France, and our own many thousands. Though this is a practice recognized by our own and the British legislation, it is manifestly one opposed to the spirit of international law.

Here are neutral Powers, without any of the risks or losses of war—for in this case one belligerent cannot interfere with this commerce—helping to arm and provide the other belligerent, and thus protract a cruel war. Suppose that in our own civil war we had not held command of ports, and that Great Britain had been able to export a continual supply of powder, guns, and cannon to the rebels, so that the struggle might be lengthened for years—would not our Government at last have complained most bitterly, and perhaps have finally taken the ground that open war with England was better than this neutrality, which secretly supported war? There ought clearly to be a new section in the International Code, forbidding all exports of arms and munitions of war by a neutral to a belligerent, and then municipal legislation should make its violation a transgression of the local law, and liable to punishment; and neutral Governments should recognize their obligations to prevent such exports.

A Royal Love-Match.

That a royal Princess should marry the heir to a Dukedom is not, on the face of it, a very remarkable circumstance. But when it is considered that the Princess is of the royal family of Great Britain, which for more than two hundred years has admitted of no alliance save with personages who possessed what is called a royal descent, the incident assumes the character of a new historical as well as social innovation. The Princess LOUISE is to be the fortunate subject of the latest royal concession to the dictates of affection and common sense. She is the fourth daughter of Queen VICTORIA, and is in her twenty-third year. The young man who is to be admitted within the magic circle of royalty is GEORGE, Marquis of Lorne, and eldest son of the Duke of ARGYLL. He is twenty-five years of age, is private secretary to his father, in his capacity of Secretary of State for India, and has given evidence in sundry literary productions of considerable talent. Tracing, on the mother's side, an ancestry which connects him with the ancient house of LEVESON-GOWER, and being himself heir to possessions which include the largest portion of a Scottish county, and being, likewise, the prospective chief of the Clan Campbell, and the lineal descendant of the great MACCALLUM MHOR—a personage who looms very large through the mists of Scottish antiquity—the bridegroom elect has every claim to be considered an eligible match. He has this additional recommendation—that he is not likely to become a dependent on the bounty of the nation. It would be difficult to find among free States a more exemplary instance of patience than that of the British tax-payer. He has carried for years, without much audible complaint, a burden to which Sinbad's Old Man of the Sea was a trifle. The decaying Princedoms of Germany have been made glad by his bounty, and every needy royal adventurer of Protestant faith in Europe, has looked forward to a British Princess as the winning number in the lottery of life. But even British patience has its limits. The Crown Prince of Prussia was a most unexceptionable match, Prince LOUIS of Hesse was a respectable alliance, the Prince of TECK has become nearly as popular as the buxom Princess MARY of Cambridge, whom he espoused, but Prince CHRISTIAN, of Schleswig-Holstein-Sonderbourg-Augustenbourg, was more than even British loyalty could very well stand. He was said to have contracted a morganatic marriage, by which he had as many children as he has names. It was known that he was a roué, and it was more than suspected that he ill-treated his wife. English journals winked and affected to be outspoken, lampooned him. The Tomahawk pursued him with consistent invective, beginning with a famous cartoon entitled "a beggar on horseback," representing the German Princeling perched on the shoulders of the British lion. The people grumbled, and cursed the Royal Marriage law which makes the disposal of a Princess an affair of State But there was no help for it. A beggarly Prince was thought more eligible than the wealthiest of British nobles.

The rumored consent of the Queen to what is unquestionably a marriage of affection, as well as a concession to popular sentiment, will be looked on as a calamity among the polysyllabic-named Princes of Germany, and will be hailed as an instance of returning good sense on the part of Queen VICTORIA by the British people. It will doubtless assist in reviving the waning popularity of the royal family. In addition to this, it has a political significance which cannot be overlooked. There is nothing very democratic in the marriage of a Princess with a Duke; but, as the French say, it is only the first step that is difficult, and once the royal marriages have got out of the charmed circle of Princes, the descent to an eminent commoner is not very far off. Thus is the irresistible current of democracy felt even where its influence is ignored, and thus do we find the first faint indications of social leveling help to prepare the way for the realization of the dream of the Republicans of the Old World—the United States of Europe.

Kentucky Dialectics.

Five gentlemen of Kentucky met, the other day, in the pleasant City of Columbus, and proceeded to settle some trifling disagreement in the amiable fashion peculiar to some gentlemen. We have before reverted to the advantages of this method of discussion, and the value of an argument which not only vindicates the justice of one's position, but finishes dispute and disputant at once. In this case, however, the opposing dialecticians seem to have been all in the wrong, or all in the right—we hardly know which. That is to say, the forcible method of reasoning adopted by each, proved so convincing, that of the party such as were not slain outright were left on the field of contest in a dying condition. The vigor of their ratiocination was only exceeded by its variety; for the discussion lasted but three minutes, and in that short space of time two of the participants were stabbed to death, one had his skull fractured with a club, one was shot fatally, and one an obstinate fellow, truly, had to be not only stabbed, but beaten into unconsciousness and conviction. This result, it must be admitted, shows a creditable degree of energy and promptness, and a sense of the value of time, not always associated with our notions of chivalry.

If this sort of thing is to be kept up in Kentucky, Tennessee must look to her laurels. Her preux chevaliers may blow each other to pieces over the game of tenpins, or pistol one another in the praiseworthy effort to decide whether or not a porter-house steak should contain a bone. But they cannot hope by such bagatelles of bloodshed to attain the supreme height of this Columbus massacre. With one or two more affairs of a like description, Kentucky will have fairly asserted the propriety of her title as the "Dark and Bloody Ground." She will become, let us say, a very Mecca of murder, whither accomplished cut-throats of all parts will journey in solemn pilgrimage to pay their homage and improve in their profession. And if when they get to Kentucky, they can only be induced to emulate the example of these heroes, the world, perhaps, will be none the worse for their resolution.

A Sleeping Beauty.

A year or so ago the world was invited to marvel over the wonderful case of a Welsh girl who never took food. She had lived, as was reported, for a number of years without eating so much as a mouthful. The neighborhood of her home rang with what racing men would call her "staying powers" in going without her dinner. Sceptics who made obvious objections were met with the assurance that the girl had been watched night and day for weeks at a time. Not only had she been watched by individuals, but whole companies had mounted guard over her so as to make sure that the poor wretch consumed no surreptitious provisions.

At last her fame spread to London. Eminent physicians went down to see the new wonder, and published accounts confirmatory of her extraordinary powers. They admitted, that is to say, that they had never seen her eat. The secret was well managed, and detection was for some time skillfully deferred. The girl was dreadfully emaciated, and it was pretty plain that she did not eat much. This, in fact, was demonstrated in the sequel, for the girl ultimately died of starvation. In the meantime, the aim of the miserable creature—that of attracting attention, and becoming, even at such a cost, a kind of lion—had been fairly attained.

The young lady whom the Western papers are now talking about under the soubriquet of the "Sleeping Beauty," will probably enjoy a similar fortune; and she will, we may suppose, have an advantage over the Welsh girl in enjoying fame at a lower cost. This young person, it seems, never wakes up. Her case, which has been thought important enough to be brought before the St. Louis Medical Society, is certainly remarkable. According to Dr. J. T. EDWARDS, of Union City, Tenn., she has puzzled eminent physicians and naturalists by this chronic coma for more than twenty years. Her name is SUSAN C. GODSEY, and during over twenty-one of the twenty-nine years she has so far lived, she has never been awake more than eight minutes at a time. Like the Welsh girl, she takes very little nourishment, and that only twice a day. When she sleeps she does not appear to breathe, and a mirror held against her nostrils remains untarnished. "Not the lightest down," we are told, "suspended against her nose by a silken thread," will quiver in the slightest degree. When her condition became known, we are also told, physicians flocked from all parts of the country to see her. But "none were able to satisfactorily account for the phenomenon, although," very naturally, "many theories were advanced." Two physicians, Drs. RHEA and GLOVER, are, it seems, in constant attendance on the girl; and although the former has visited her regularly for sixteen years, "he can still form no opinion regarding the cause" of her distemper. It is properly noted as a remarkable feature in the case that, while Miss GODSEY'S hair has grown to a great length, "her finger-nails have not grown any since she was first stricken."

There are other interesting characteristics about this singular young lady. Of course she is very lovely, otherwise she would not deserve her soubriquet. She is happy in the possession of "a mass of dark auburn hair, well-formed forehead, dark hazel eyes fringed with heavy lashes, well-shaped nose and small mouth." But as a set-off to these charms, her mental acquisitions are inconsiderable. She retains what knowledge she possessed at eight years of age, but has not been awake enough since then to learn anything more. It is only justice to Miss GODSEY to add that Dr. EDWARDS stated before the Medical Society that he had known her family for a number of years, and "knew that there was no deception or humbug" in the matter. Under these circumstances the report to be rendered by the Committee of Five appointed by the Society to visit Miss GODSEY will be a document of interest and importance. Somnolency such as this is alleged to be transcends all authentic precedents of which we have any knowledge, and corroborative testimony with regard to it will be received with eagerness by the general public, as well as by the medical profession.

The Extravagant Prices.

More than five years have passed since the termination of our civil war. During this time the progress of the country has been very great. Population has increased, wealth has increased, and the credit of the Government has steadily advanced. Meanwhile, with a yield of cotton and cereals for each consecutive year hardly equaled by even exceptional years before, new territory has been opened to labor, insuring the continuance of similar results. The national debt has been so far, and, to many people, so unexpectedly diminished, as to appreciate materially all the Government's promises to pay. And yet, with all this prosperity, the buying power of the national paper money is so limited as to maintain at illogical prices nearly all the necessaries of life. With more land to cultivate, more grain to eat, and more cotton wherewith to clothe ourselves than any other nation, the cost of food and garments is higher here than in any other country.

It is natural that prices should rise during the prosecution of a costly war, and that they should return with slowness and reluctance to their usual rates after its close. But for reasons not difficult to point out, but impossible to justify, this return has in our case been far too slow. Almost everything we eat and wear is much dearer than five years after the war, it ought to be. The concentration of numbers in great cities will manifestly always bear a certain elevating effect on prices. But we in New-York are yet far below the population of foreign capitals, and in none of them today is the price of bread, meat, and clothes so high as here. Gold has gone down, and cotton has gone down, and grain has gone down, but those who buy the necessaries of life for home consumption do not, as they ought to do, profit by these declines. It is clear that too much toll is levied on products between the producer and consumer. Middle-men continue to avail themselves of the inflated condition of values during the war, and to absorb exaggerated and unreasonable profits. By mere force of habit, chiefly, this is assented to by the community, when it should be systematically resisted. Past accumulations are thus, in many cases, being swept away, to meet demands which the average gains from business are yearly growing less adequate to satisfy.

Prices, we repeat, are far too high, and this is especially true of large cities, and in them especially true of the necessaries of life. All this must be changed, and the longer change is deferred the more likely is it to come in the form of catastrophe. What is most important to the mass of the community is that they should have cheaper living and cheaper covering. But the prices of many other things are still swollen beyond reason, and though the efforts of speculators may temporarily sustain so unhealthy a condition, it must surely give place to one more sound and legitimate. The business of the country will never be what it should be until a universal gravitation of prices to a natural basis enables people to establish their affairs on solid grounds, as regards both the present and the future.

When people see a "Sabbath Festival" announced, under the direction of JAMES FISK, Jr., and Mrs. MONTALAND, they very naturally suppose that it is to take place in Mr. TWEED'S garden on Fifth-avenue, and that it will be marked by copious libations of grog from the celebrated punch-bowl. It is easy to imagine TWEED, FISK, and all the rest of that devout company enjoying themselves under the fountain, singing the chorus in "Le Petit Faust," which is very appropriate to their condition, and which sets forth their determination to die in what the translator calls their "final excesses:

"Amis gaiment dans les jardins
Que fréquentent ces demoiselles,
Nous voyons passer les gandins
Qui nous soufflent nos belles"—

the "gandins" in this case being the Erie shareholders and the tax-payers of New-York, who pay all expenses. It appears, however, that the pious entertainment in question is to take place elsewhere, and that MONTALAND, that sweet ministering angel, is to preside over the services, and to lift up her voice in a song by OFFENBACH, which is the nearest thing to a sacred melody she ever learnt. Mr. FISK at a "Sabbath Festival" must be a quickening sight, and it is a pity the sober New-Englanders who lately visited him did not stop long enough to see it. They might then have perceived that Mr. FISK can afford to make Sunday hideous, or play any other pranks he may choose in a community which patiently submits to all his insults.

As we pointed out on the outbreak of hostilities in Europe, there were two sides to the commercial effects of the war on this country. The first has already been felt in the stoppage of the flow of capital to our great railroad and other enterprises, mainly in the West. The second, according to our special dispatch of this morning, will shortly be experienced in the greatly-increased demand for our cereals all over France and Germany. The one country has been, to a great extent, swept clean not only of the yield of the last harvest, but of the materials and appliances necessary to prepare for the next year's crop. The other has been drained both of food and men, and the people enter on the new year with a greatly-diminished reserve of food, and a smaller cultivated area prepared for the next season. That we shall gain by the one result as much as we have lost by the other is questionable; that we shall gain largely there can be no doubt.

Gasconade is a word of French origin, and seems at present to be very fully illustrated by what is going on in Paris. The most strictly neutral observer is probably, at the present moment, rather disposed to rejoice over the successes of the beleaguered garrison, but the persistent and childish exaggeration of the French dispatches is sufficient to cool the ardor of even the warmest friends of France. With the Empire the era of lying was supposed to have terminated, but, to go no further back than the official account of the sortie of the 12th, it is quite obvious that the Provisional Government is, to put it mildly, somewhat imaginative in its bulletins. Such an assumption is, of course, based on the contradictory accounts of the Prussians, but as they have uniformly been found to be much nearer the truth than their opponents, disinterested spectators can scarcely be blamed for yielding them a preference.

The Evening Post alleges that our opposition to Tammany is in some degree neutralized by the support we gave to the new charter when before the Legislature. Between our position then and our position now, there is, however, no difference whatever. With the Republican members of the Legislature, we accepted the new charter partly on its merits as an improvement upon that previously in force, but more especially in reliance upon promises made with regard to the working of the new order of things, indorsed and pressed upon us as those promises were by the Citizens' Association, which elaborately argued the subject in a published memorial. Had the Citizens' Association really exacted the guarantees which its officers pretended they had exacted, or had the Democratic promoters of the charter kept faith with the Republicans in the Legislature, and with the public, much of the corruption and rascality of which we now complain would have been impossible. The failure to fulfill pledges made at Albany swells the infamy of TWEED and his gang. The charter which, under honest Republican administration, might have facilitated valuable reforms, has, by Tammany's treachery, been made a mockery and a snare. Surely, it is not "too late," as the Post insists, to wrest from Tammany the power it acquired by falsehood and fraud, and to confide to Republican hands authority which TWEED and his allies have basely prostituted.

There are some new theories about red sandstone which, if they stand the test of practice, will constitute highly-important discoveries. It is said, on high authority, that wheat grown above sandstone contains far more iron and phosphorus than wheat grown above coal. When we remember how much iron is needed for the blood and phosphorus for the brain of this generation, the consequence of this becomes manifest. Especially is the discovery, if it is one, of value to the literary and studious classes. It is pointed out, among other things, by advocates of its truth that insects take their color from the plants on which they feed, and plants from the soil on which they grow. Also, that the mighty red oxen of Devon thrive best on a sandstone soil.

The blockade of Broadway is a grievance from which nearly everybody suffers, but which nobody ever does anything seriously to prevent. The widening of the street at the City Hall Park may be pointed out as an exception, but so long as the street retains its old dimensions both above and below the Park, it is plain that the relief from widening it for a few hundred feet must be rather apparent than real. The blocks in Broadway are chiefly caused by heavy traffic, which might find passage on the east or west side. On the theory, we suppose, that Broadway is more amusing than the other parallel streets, the drivers insist on forcing their vehicles into the former thoroughfare. If it is impossible to reach this nuisance by municipal regulation, the Police might at least have discretionary power to turn heavy wagons off the street, except those bound to the next block from the one where they are found.

It is said that, although undistinguishable by dress from their men, the death-rate among the Prussian officers during the war has been enormously high. This can only arise from their throwing themselves into positions of the greatest danger, a course in which the better educated in the ranks are likely to follow them. When this is taken into account, together with the disease which must arise among the more delicately nurtured from exposure—no tents being allowed in the field—we begin to appreciate the vast losses that are the price paid by united Germany for her successes. The Economist estimates her loss of young men to amount to not less than two hundred thousand by casualties of every sort, even should the war terminate now. What it may be with an indefinite continuance of hostilities can only be surmised.

We have received a large number of letters from correspondents on the subject of the Tweed and Erie Rings, and with reference to Gov. HOFFMAN and the Judiciary. We much regret that the demands upon our space compel us to omit many of these communications, but we shall publish a selection from them to-morrow, and hope thereafter to find room for at least a few twice or thrice a week.

AMUSEMENTS.

The Theatres—Review and Announcements.

"The Two Roses," brought forward at Wallack's on Monday, has given the frequenters of this house the pleasure they most relish—a comedy, that is to say, of contemporaneous life tastefully mounted, and acted with talent and care. It is undeniable that any piece at this theatre in which neither Mr. GILBERT nor Mr. BROUGHAM, Mr. WALLACK nor Miss HENRIQUES appears, suggests a certain air if not of weakness, of strength withheld. Elsewhere the cast of such a play as now presented might be reckoned an excellent one, and we have no words of disparagement for the sterling artists who perform in it. We have, on the contrary, taken occasion to extol their efforts in terms of decided eulogy. To speak otherwise of such impersonations as those of the principals in "The Two Roses" would be unjust. Mr. FISHER, in particular, makes an admirable study of Digby Grant—makes that character, in fact, the true hero of the drama. Mr. STODDART is quaint and amusing in his own peculiar way as Jenkins. Mr. MARLOWE is very good indeed in the blind organist, and The Two Roses themselves are all that an ardent and exacting fancy need paint them. For all this the comedy needs body, so to speak. The interest of the plot is insufficient to retain attention, which is reserved, therefore, for detached scenes; and although there are scattered through the dialogue some clever touches, and now and again some strikingly happy repartees, the contest on the whole lacks vigor and originality. Since the first night it, however, runs much more smoothly, and if not destined to enjoy the long hold on popular affection retained by "Caste" or "Ours," "The Two Roses" will be seen by everybody with pleasure, and will leave behind only agreeable memories. ...."Kabale und Liebe," (Love and Intrigue,) one of the most intense, if not the most artistic of SCHILLER'S tragedies, was on Thursday night represented at the Fourteenth-street Theatre before a large and enthusiastic audience. The plot of this drama is one of those peculiarly disagreeable stories in which the German mind finds a peculiar delight, and the histrionic portrayal of the sorrows and sufferings of Louisa Miller has always been a favorite with our Teutonic fellow-citizens. The story is simply this: A maiden of low degree is loved by the son of the Prime Minister of a corrupt German Court, whose father's ambition destines him to wed the cast-off mistress of his sovereign. A letter to an imaginary lover, forced from the unwilling Louisa by the Minister's creature and Secretary as the price of her father's life, is used to persuade the young nobleman of his sweetheart's treachery, and the play ends in a delightfully tragic mélange of suicide and murder. The character of the heroine seems especially adapted to Mme. SEEBACH'S great abilities, and she interpreted it with a sweetness, an elevated pathos and a profound and mournful tenderness which made a deep impression upon her hearers. Her acting in the latter scene in particular was exceedingly fine, and was aided by the admirable personation of the heartless Secretary, given by Mr. HARRY. Mlle. VENETA infused into the rôle of Lady Milford all the force and dignity characteristic of a nature originally noble, though fallen, and the other parts were filled with care and precision by the members of this really fine company. "Kabale und Liebe" was repeated on Friday, and "Jane Eyre" was given yesterday for a matinée. For to-morrow, "Mathilde" is announced. Those of our readers who have not yet seen Mme. SEEBACH, should make it a point to do so before her engagement is over, or they will have to regret missing one of the finest artists that has ever appeared on the American stage...."Le Petit Faust" has been given during the week at the Grand Opera-house, the only deviation in the performance being caused by the addition to it of the Duck Song, which Mlle. SILLY interprets with at least as much drollery as Mlle. THERESA, and without that person's coarseness. A revival of "La Grande Duchesse" is promised for this week, and opera bouffe is to alternate with "Le Petit Faust," until OFFENBACH'S "Les Brigands" shall be ready for performance. The Sunday concerts at the Grand Opera-house can henceforward be attended as during last Fall and Winter. The first of the series occurs this evening, the opera bouffe company and Miss NILLY PIERIS being the principal singers.... "Little Nell and the Marchioness" remains upon the bills at Niblo's this week....The reappearance of Miss LINA EDWIN in "Cinderella" is announced at Lina Edwin's Theatre....Miss LYDIA THOMPSON and her company return to their first loves to-morrow, when they are to act and sing at Wood's Museum....Concerts are now being given every Saturday afternoon at the Brooklyn Tabernacle, the grand organ in use during the Boston Festival being the instrument. Dr. SCHUYLER and Dr. BEAMES were the organists yesterday. Dr. SCHUYLER played, with his accustomed skill, HESSE'S "Theme and Variations in A," and BUCK'S variations on "The Star Spangled Banner." Dr. BEAMES played the overture to "Poet and Peasant," and the march from MENDELSSOHN'S "Athalia." The other artists were M. TOULMIN, harpist; Mr. DE SOLA, tenor, and Miss MARIA BRAINERD, soprano. Mr. GEORGE W. MORGAN presides at the organ on Saturday next.

The first act of the third part of the "Nibelungen" has been completed by Herr WAGNER, and the entire work is to be finished within two years.

THE NOVEMBER MAGAZINES.

—Harper's Magazine, for November, opens with the story of the massacres and persecutions of the Huguenots in 1572. The writer appears to have used considerable research in compiling anew the narrative of events which, even in those dark and licentious days, filled all Christendom with pity and horror. Some good illustrations accompany the text. "The Cave of Bellamar," discovered in 1861, not far from Havana, forms the subject of an interesting descriptive paper; also with numerous excellent cuts. The cave is of great extent, and is surpassed by none in the world for beauty and crystalline magnificence, and extraordinary combination of grottoes, lakes, galleries, vast chambers, and other subterranean wonders. "Down the Mississippi," is a lively account of a journey by a party of ladies and gentlemen, and besides being pleasant reading contains a variety of information interspersed with its sketches of incident, scenery and character. "Life in Brittany" contains some good descriptions of that country from the pen of a tourist. There is a further installment of the "Life of Frederick the Great," including the famous Berlin carousal of 1750, the celebrity of which filled all Europe, and the excellent novel "Anne Furness" is continued. A novel, "The Rock of the Legion of Honor," by BERTHOLD AUERBACH, is also commenced in this volume and promises well. The other contents of the magazine, including a remarkably well-written story, "The Pilot's Wife," a surgical whimsey called "My Distinguished Friend Seltzam," and many other papers make up an unusually varied and interesting selection for the month. The usual Editorial Departments are quite up to the mark.

—The Galaxy contains a valuable narrative of facts in relation to the expedition for the relief of Fort Sumter, contributed by Hon. GIDEON WELLES, Ex-Secretary of the Navy. The paper will, of course, considering the official position of its writer during the war, be accepted as an important and authentic record of that memorable episode of the great struggle. CARL BENSON gives some "Reminiscences and Speculations" apropos of the turning point, in 1861, in the King of Prussia's life, in which German, political and military affairs are discussed with the writer's usual ability and aplomb. Mr. JUSTIN MCCARTHY'S "Lady Judith" increases in interest with the new chapters in this number, and the travelers' history, "Overland," is entitled to the same commendations. Readers of Mr. DISRAELI'S Lothair know that the Monsignore Catesby in the book is supposed to represent a French Roman Catholic Priest, Monsignore CAPEL. A sketch of this now celebrated personage, by FANNY BARROW, places him very distinctly before us. The author had the opportunity of making his acquaintance during a somewhat lengthened sojourn at Pau, where he resides. An engraving of M. CAPEL is also given. ALEXANDRE DUMAS, Père, is the subject of a well-informed biographical notice. "Mark Twain" reproduces his map of Paris, with some additional explanation. We hardly fancy it was worth while for so good a magazine to afford it the space. We need not particularize the remaining contents of this number, further than to say that they are of fair ability. Taken as a whole, this month's Galaxy must be considered satisfactory.

—Putnam's Monthly begins a rather grave list of contributions with an essay by Prof. DE VERE, entitled the "Man in the Moon," the final conclusion of which is that the moon may be inhabited. The article is suggestive and readable. Dr. KEATINGE discourses on French influence at the Vatican, which, in view of recent events, is matter for reflection, and it is treated of with ability by the writer. A kindly paper "about dogs socially" illustrates the faithful companionship of the four-footed friend of man very pleasantly. Some vouched-for notes of the troubles Mr. LINCOLN experienced from the constant visits of petitioners, is another testimony to the unwearied generosity of our good President. "A Pilgrimage to Peking" gives some idea of how people travel in China, and sketches some features of Chinese life besides. Some other contributions, closed by "Editorial Notes," "Literature at Home," and title and contents to the sixth volume, complete Putnam for November, which we can scarcely regard as lively or attractive as a popular magazine should aim to be.

—Lippincott's Dictionary of Biography and Mythology reaches its Tenth Part. We have before spoken of the sterling value of this publication, which every person having the least desire for mental cultivation should possess.

—The Old Guard for October presents no special feature for notice, unless indeed a readable sketch, "Among the Aztecs," may be named as conveying some impressions of Mexico, a country of which, in spite of its relations to the United States, we know but little.

The Newman Fund.

The graphic artists of this City and Boston are preparing for exhibition a collection of sketches and drawings by members of this craft, which are afterward to be disposed of by means of a lottery for the benefit of the family of a brother artist, Mr. WILLIAM NEWMAN, lately deceased. MANSFIELD, Ohio, Oct. 15.—The trial of WM. GAGE for murder, by throwing a train of cars, of the Pittsburg and Fort Wayne Railroad, from the track, near Lucas, Ohio, in May last, killing an unknown man and wounding several persons, was concluded in the Richland Court of Common Pleas last night. Lieut. WANN and a detachment of the Thirteenth United States Infantry acted as an escort to the expedition. The party are all well, and will start to-morrow for Salt Lake and California.

THE LATE ROBERT E. LEE.

Eulogies of the English Press—Demonstrations of Grief in Southern Cities.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

LONDON, Oct. 15.—The English journals are teeming with eulogistic obituary notices of Gen. LEE. In the Times this morning, Col. TREMANTLE, of the Guards, goes so far as to say that the single blot upon the reputation of the great commander, the escape from annihilation of the Northern army after Fredericksburg, is to be attributed to the fact that the feeling of humanity overpowered the stern duty of the General. This has been often said before, but never established.

LOUISVILLE, Oct. 15.—Today has been universally observed as a day of mourning for the death of Gen. LEE. All buildings on leading thoroughfares, and many private residences are appropriately draped; all the wholesale houses were closed, and business generally suspended. The Ex-Confederate soldiers formed a procession, wearing crape, and proceeded in a body to St. Paul's Church to hear the eulogy upon Gen. LEE by Rev. Mr. PLATT. The most distinguished and substantial of our citizens united in the demonstration of respect. All party distinctions and prejudices were ignored. The fire-bells have been tolled all day; to-night a monster mass-meeting is being held at Welsigen Hall, of which the Mayor is Chairman, and in which all classes of our citizens, ignoring past differences, are participating. Eulogies will be delivered by Gens. BRECKENRIDGE and PRESTON, Ex-Confederate Generals, and also by Gen. FINNETT, Ex-Federal General.

NORFOLK, Va., Oct. 15.—A shadow of the deepest gloom rests upon our city. Every heart is filled with sorrow for the death of Gen. LEE. Norfolk is clothed in mourning for the departed hero. A meeting of citizens was held last night, at which resolutions were adopted expressing the deep grief of our people, and tendering to the stricken family the condolence of hearts that, like theirs, beat heavy, and are sad with an overwhelming affliction. On the day of the funeral business will be suspended.

GOLDSBORO', N. C., Oct. 15.—The death of Gen. LEE has produced a most profound sensation in this community. The stores, hotels and public buildings are all draped in mourning, and will be closed from 12 till 3 o'clock. All classes and parties join in paying honors to the memory of the departed.

RALEIGH, Oct. 15.—The announcement of Gen. LEE'S death has plunged this community into deepest gloom. The soldiers of the late Confederate States Army, without any pre-arrangement, appeared on the street yesterday wearing crape. A meeting of citizens was held in the church, a large number of ladies participating, at which appropriate resolutions were adopted, and a committee appointed to arrange for a memorial service. Judge WATTS adjourned the Superior Court yesterday, in respect to the memory of Gen. LEE.

MOBILE, Oct. 15.—Today was generally observed in respect to the memory of Gen. LEE. All places of business and public offices were closed and draped in mourning.

SAVANNAH, Ga., Oct. 15.—Today was universally observed as a holiday. Every store in the city was closed, and the flags of the shipping were at half-mast. Many houses and places of business were draped in mourning in memory of Gen. LEE. A meeting of citizens was held at the Exchange, but the crowd was so immense that it was adjourned to Monument-square. A Committee was appointed, which reported resolutions recommending the appointment of a Committee of thirteen to draft suitable resolutions for the occasion, to be reported at a future meeting, and adjourned. During the proceedings Gen. JOSEPH E. JOHNSTON and Gen. HENRY R. JACKSON were called upon to address the meeting, and in brief speeches responded. Both of them stated that it was impossible for them to do justice to the memory of the great dead. Besides these gentlemen, Commodore TATTNALL, Gens. SORRELL, LAWTON and WAYNE, Cols. SCRIVEN and WAYNE, and other distinguished persons in the city, occupied places on the stand. Bishop BECKWITH preached a sermon in Christ Church. No day has been more generally observed as a holiday since 1860.

WILMINGTON, Oct. 15.—With few exceptions every business house in the city closed from 12 to 1 o'clock today, as a mark of respect to the memory of Gen. LEE. An noon an immense meeting of citizens, including 100 ladies, was held in the theatre, and suitable resolutions were passed. THE NEW JEWISH RITUAL.

Another Advance of Reformed Judaism—The New Ritual of the Temple Israel—Rev. Mr. Lewin and Militant Judaism.

We have, on previous occasions, adverted to the progress of the reformed school of Judaism as a remarkable development of the religious tendencies of the age. As we then showed, the most advanced section of the progressive portion of the Jewish Church finds its ablest expositor and representative in this locality in the person of Rev. RAPHAEL D'C. LEWIN, Rabbi of the Temple Israel, Brooklyn. We have before us the latest effort of this gentleman in the direction of bringing his religion into harmony with "the demands of reason, the requirements of modern civilization and enlightenment," without neglecting "the vital principles and ancient landmarks of Judaism." This comes to us in the form of an American-Jewish Ritual, the publication of which the author states to have been one of the objects of his life. Viewing this work from a standpoint outside of the Jewish race and religion, and in the light of a tolerably accurate knowledge of existing manuals of Jewish worship, we find the book possesses sundry noticeable features. It may be remarked that the Orthodox Minhagin, as the existing orders of devotion are usually termed, present a very formidable array of volumes. The prayers for each of the chief religious festivals of the Church occupy a bulky octavo, and the ordinary daily prayers are contained within similar compass. The efforts already made by the Reformed School to reduce the order of public worship within more reasonable limits, are three in number. First, the "Ritual" in use at the Temple Emanuel, compiled by Dr. MERZBACHER, and revised by Dr. ADLER, contained in two volumes, one devoted exclusively to the services for the day of Atonement, the other comprising the remainder of the daily and special services; second, the "Ritual" of the Temple Adas Jeshurun, compiled by Dr. WISE, of Cincinnati, in one volume; and, third, the "Minhag America," compiled in three volumes by Dr. WISE, of Cincinnati. The orthodox section of the Church conduct all their public services in Hebrew, the translation on the opposite page being merely added for the convenience of the worshippers. In the "Ritual" of the Temple Emanuel, a small proportion of the prayers are read in English; in that compiled by Dr. EINHORN, what is not spoken in Hebrew is said in German; in the ritual of Dr. WISE there is a curious mixture of English, German and Hebrew, neither of which has the reputation of being strictly grammatical, and as regards both the German and English portions, we can state from some little examination that the language can scarcely be termed classical. The newly-published volume of Mr. LEWIN embodies a larger proportion of prayers to be read in English than any of its predecessors, the use of the Hebrew being only retained in sundry well-known and distinctive portions of the service. The translation is throughout new, and without professing to judge of its correctness, there can be no question as to its general elegance and evident appropriateness. One very noticeable feature in the prayers is that they contain petitions for all mankind, the orthodox custom being to intercede for Israel and for Israel alone. The strictly original portions of the book are the services for confirmation, burial and marriage; the family prayers and the memorial of departed souls occurring in the vesper service for the day of Atonement. The service of confirmation is a distinctive feature of the Reformed school, the Orthodox having nothing to correspond with it save a very imperfect formula of introducing males to the Church, and none at all for the admission of females. In fact, the Orthodox prayers contain a distinct expression of thanksgiving to be used by men in acknowledgment of the goodness of the Deity in not having made them women. The confirmation service introduced in the present volume is at once simple, expressed and beautiful. The same may be said of the funeral service. The marriage service is an immense advance on that employed by the orthodox Jews, of which certain portions are unpleasantly suggestive of the merely sensuous side of the relation. The form used by Mr. LEWIN is very closely assimilated to that employed by the majority of Christian churches, and has nothing in it to which the most fastidious could object. The domestic prayers are exceedingly well conceived and expressed. The memorial of departed souls is evidently designed in much to draw the thoughts of the worshipper to a recollection of the bonds of affection that united them with the deceased, and to continue these into the higher sphere of spiritual relation, as to the purpose an intercession for their future welfare. The doctrinal position of Reformed Judaism with reference to the destiny of the immortal part, after the death of the body, is evidently of a somewhat hazy character. Beautiful and impressive as this part of the service is, even an appearance of endeavoring to influence the lot of spirits passed beyond the grave seems, from a Protestant standpoint, to be somewhat of a solecism in so rational a system of religion. We understand, however, that, on the introduction of the ritual, this portion of the service caused the most profound emotion among the worshipers.

The American Jewish Ritual was introduced to the Temple Israel on New Years eve, and will doubtless be ere long generally adopted among the more advanced of the Reformed Jewish congregations. As showing the actuating motive of its author, we give the brief exordium delivered on the occasion of its first use:

"It becomes my happy privilege, on this the eve of a new year, to introduce into this young reformed congregation, the American Jewish Ritual, and to declare it to be, from this night henceforth, the established Ritual of Temple Israel.

May God grant that it may prove instrumental in furthering the hallowed mission of Israel, in disseminating the principles of pure Judaism, and in promoting the great cause of progress and reform.

May God bless the members of this congregation, and grant their life to exist "Temple Israel become a great congregation, an honor to themselves, and a pride to the name of Israel."

On Sunday last the Board of Trustees of the Temple Israel met in their vestry-room, and passed the following address, which, after an adjournment in a body to the house of Mr. LEWIN, was duly read and presented by the Vice-President of the Board, Mr. S. KOCH:

To Rev. Raphael D'C. Lewin:

But a few months have elapsed since you were invited to take charge of the spiritual affairs of "Temple Israel," which, without reservation for a time, you heartily accepted, in order to establish our congregation upon a firm base. Our anticipations and hopes of success, at that period, were but vague, until you brought to bear upon them your untiring efforts and zeal. Bravely and nobly have you labored in the glorious work, trusting in God, and in the purity of your principles, and never doubting to make Temple Israel one of the most enlightened and progressive congregations of the age. Neither despondency nor apathy was allowed to hang its gloomy pall over the bright prospects which loomed up before you. First came the inauguration, then the consecration of our own building, and to crown your efforts to insure success, you introduced after much labor, the American Jewish Ritual, and instituted it in Temple Israel. Its worship having been tried, proved, and accepted as satisfactory, we tender you our grateful and heartfelt thanks. In this, Sir, you have evinced an unselfish ambition and a zeal which have won our respect and admiration. Your knee, Sir, has never been bent to Baal, only to God. Your guiding star is Judaism in its pristine purity and spirit. Your banner has been unfurled to the world.

"THE VOICE OF REASON IS THE VOICE OF GOD."

These sacred ties, which should bind minister and congregation in love and friendship, find in full response from us. These are not empty and unmeaning words, but spring from the hearts of those who can appreciate truth, principle and an honest purpose.

Henceforth, under your guidance, we enter with renewed vigor upon our duties to God and the human family, and may your labors tend to foster and place Judaism before the world in its true spirit.

In conclusion, we offer you our best wishes for a happy and prosperous year, and may God in His infinite mercy bless you and your family.

Very respectfully and truly yours,

S. KOCH, President of Temple Israel, for the Board of Trustees.

Mr. LEWIN responded in a few suitable and feeling remarks, and the members of the Board retired. Today is, in the Jewish calendar, the last of the Feast of Tabernacles, and the chief commemorative days of Judaism with which the New Year opens having thus been gone through, the New Ritual may be said to have been fairly tried. We understand that the consistent verdict of the congregation of the Temple Israel has been one of cordial approval.

The Diamond Fields of South Africa—Large Shipments to England.

The Grahamstown, Cape of Good Hope, Journal, of the 13th of August, says:

"There certainly never has been such a stir in this colony before, excepting at the time of war. Every town and district in the colony has sent its contingent to the army of workers at the Vaal Fields, and still the movement goes on. In May there were about 100 men at the diggings. Before the end of June there were 700. At the close of July there were over 1,000; and at the present it is estimated that there are at the Klip Drift, Phiel, Hebron, and Klerksmuns Fields no less than 2,000 men. When it is remembered that the European population in the colony is scattered over a large surface and at the best but small, and that distances here are very great, it will be understood that pretty strong motives must have been at work to occasion so large a movement. The discovery of the 'Star of South Africa,' now known at home, has been followed by that of other stones, which, if not so valuable as that superb gem, are of great excellence and in large numbers. As the fields are in a country owned by no one who can substantiate his claim, there is no organization of labor, and there are no means of ascertaining the actual discoveries. Some keep their good fortunes to themselves, and again there are cases in which a diamond is talked about until it becomes several diamonds. The Customs returns will, after a while, give trustworthy statistics. At present it is estimated that the Natal Company has sent home diamonds to the value of £12,000; that MOSENTHAL & Co. shipped £4,500 by the Roman; that the Norseman took away £450, and the Northam £2,800, while it is said that the Cambrian will now receive £20,000. If to these sums be added the price of the Star of South Africa, a sum of £60,000 is reached, and these shipments leave a large number of gems in the colony and in the possession of diggers at the fields. Some parties are known to have been successful. The Natal and King Williamstown parties may be especially mentioned. They have divided about £20,000 between them. As a matter of course, out of so large a number of diggers many have been greatly disappointed; and in making the above statement we do so only in our office as reporters of news, and not at all with a desire to excite to rash adventure.

As to the position of the fields, it may be as well to say that they are within 100 miles west of Bloemfontein, and 100 miles north of Fauresmith. Let any one who has one of HALL'S maps of South Africa, follow the twenty-eighth line of latitude until it crosses the Vaal. Immediately below the point of intersection he will see a great bend in the river. The fields are on both sides of the river, at the lowest secondary curve of that great bend. On the south-eastern side is the Phiel Field, and on the north-western side is the Klip Drift Field. Port Alfred is the nearest colonial port to the diamond fields, and Capetown is the most distant. From Grahamstown, whether by Cradock or Queenstown, the distance is by no means formidable. A party from the city accomplished the journey in a bullock waggon in eighteen days. We do not advise any one who lives at home at ease' to rush to the diamond diggings; but should the lottery prove as attractive at home as it has shown itself to be here, then it should be remembered that the nearest seaport to the fields is neither Capetown nor Port Natal, but that Port Alfred and Port Elizabeth are much nearer, and that as either of these ports good traveling accommodation is to be obtained."

A correspondent of the Daily Telegraph says: "The Prussian authorities have just concluded a contract for 600,000 Winter coats for their army. These are to be long, coming down to the knee, covered with a water-proof cloth on the outside, and lined inside with sheep-skin, a hood of the same material forming part of each coat. Each such garment is to cost, as nearly as possible, twenty-five francs, or one pound sterling. Beside the Winter coats, the same Government has given a contract for 600,000 pairs of big Winter boots, which are to cost about ten shillings each. This hardly looks as if the Prussians expected to leave France before the worst of the Winter has set in, if, indeed, they do so then."

NEW-JERSEY HOMES.

One of the Places of Refuge for Tax-Ridden New-Yorkers—Some of the Advantages of Living on the Other Side of the Hudson—Cheap Rents and Speedy Transit.

The high rate of taxation to which residents in this City are subjected is causing a diminution in our Metropolitan population, exceeding, probably, the influx of people annually received from cities and towns outside of Manhattan Island, and the numbers of foreign immigrants who remain in the City after landing. A large proportion of those who seek for homes beyond the City, and who are, nevertheless, compelled to live within easy riding distance of New-York, in order that they may carry on business here without being subjected to the extortionate demands of the "Ring" cormorants, who, like the horse-leech, are reiterating, with increasing vehemence every year, their cry of "Give, give," find ample home facilities in the towns and villages of New-Jersey, and especially in those of the northerly section of that State. The increase of population, in fact, which has marked Northern New-Jersey, during the past ten years more particularly, may be, for the most part, attributed to the cause above set forth, and the continuance of that increase is only another proof that people see no hope of any lessening of the burden of taxation so long as Tammany holds sway over the purse and property of our island population.

The owners of real estate are, of course, the first to feel the effects of this inordinate taxation, and are loudest in their complaints against the systematic robbery to which they are subjected. Such of our people, however, who live in hired tenements know that eventually the burden of high taxation is borne by themselves. Whenever the landlord finds that an increase of tax has been levied on his property, he invariably puts the addition (oftentimes doubled and trebled) on the tenant; so that high and constantly increasing rents everywhere throughout the City have been sources of continual complaint. Owing to this cause, thousands leave the Metropolis every year, and take up their abodes where they are not compelled to pay out all their earnings to the rapacious landlord or to the cormorant tax-gatherer.

Few places in New-Jersey have profited by this exodus of our population to a greater extent than Elizabeth City. This place now has a population of 23,000 souls, and possesses every facility for supplying home-seekers with comfortable residences. Two lines of railway pass through the city—the New-Jersey Central, from New-York to Easton, Penn., thence to Pittsburg and the West; and the New-Jersey Railroad and Transportation Company, leading to Philadelphia, and thence South and West. On these two roads there are run, daily, 116 passenger trains, in the aggregate, or fifty-eight on each road, beside numbers of coal and freight trains, thus affording the amplest facilities for reaching and returning from the city, at almost any time between the hours of 4 o'clock A. M. and 12 o'clock midnight. By this means persons engaged in any city occupation may be assured of accommodation. The time occupied in reaching the city is so well graduated that it requires only forty-five or fifty minutes' travel after leaving Elizabeth, by either of these routes, to land one in New-York; or only five minutes more than is requisite to enable one to reach the City Hall from many points above the lower terminus of the Central Park. And it may be remarked, in this connection, that the liability to delay on the route is not half as great on either of these steam roads as it is on the route of any line of horse-cars that traverses our City thoroughfares. Commutation by either of the steam railroads above mentioned has been fixed at $65 60 per annum.

The item of rent is, of course, the most important one to be considered in connection with the subject of finding a home in the vicinity of New-York; and in this matter Elizabeth holds out weighty inducements to those in search of residences. Houses may be rented there at prices ranging from $250 to $3,000 per annum. A comfortable house of six rooms may be had for $250, and a larger one, containing eight rooms, within ten minutes' walk of the depot, generally rents for from $400 to $450 per annum. Residences containing eight rooms, if one chooses to go a short distance from the business centre of the City, may be obtained at an annual rental of $500. In these latter instances the tenant will have, in addition to the house itself, a garden plot extensive enough to enable him to grow an abundance of vegetables for family use. The area of these garden plots is generally equal in extent to six City lots, 25 by 100 feet each. For the same number of rooms that may here be had for $450, the denizen of this City has to pay in any desirable locality at least $900. Now, suppose he hires, in Elizabeth, a residence for $450; add to this his commutation by railroad, $65 60, and we have his total rental amounting to $515 60. Take this amount from $900—the rent for the same number of rooms in any locality above Fortieth-street, and the residue is $384 40—the amount the tenant will save if he makes his home in Elizabeth. But, in addition to his actual rent, the tenant in New-York is obliged to pay annually, and swells his rent to $931 20, leaving him better off, if he lived in Elizabeth, at the end of the year, just $415 60—a sum which would go a great way to support an ordinary family.

To such as desire to own their residences, it may be said that lots may be purchased for from $275 to $1,000, according to location. A good building lot, in a desirable locality, may be bought for $500, and on this a very fair frame house may be put up for about $2,500, making the whole cost of the property but little more than the aggregate sum paid for three years' rent of eight rooms in Fortieth-street. It may be remarked, also, that Elizabeth has ample water facilities, fine schools, both public and private, and is filling up with a class of population in every way desirable. Vast numbers of most industrious mechanics, as well as more pecuniarily favored people, are making their homes in this section.

While there is an inducement in the way of cheap rents to attract people to this section of the country, it is well they should understand that the prevailing opinion, to the effect that provisions are cheaper in the rural towns than in the City, is a false one. Everything of this character is regulated by the market price in New-York, at any point within a radius of at least thirty miles from the Metropolis. For everything edible, as well as for fuel and clothing, the resident in any of these places must expect to pay just as much as if these articles were purchased in New-York; in fact, if there be any difference in price, that difference is in favor of the City purchaser. This is singularly apparent as to the matter of fuel. Although hundreds of cars laden with coal from the Pennsylvania mining region pass through Elizabeth daily, en route to New-York, the purchaser of that material in the first-named place, will find that he can procure it no cheaper than it is sold in New-York. Board may be had at about the same rate as in New-York. Comfortable accommodations in this respect command, for a single gentleman, from $12 to $30 per week, and mechanics' board from $7 to $12 per week, prices being on the average about the same as those which obtain in this City.

Turning to a still more northerly section of the State, and following the line of the Northern Railroad of New-Jersey, we find numbers of small towns springing up, and which are being fast populated by the over-taxed people who are residents of the Metropolis. The Northern Road runs through the country lying on the west slope of the Palisade Ridge, from its intersection with the Erie Railway west of the tunnel, to Piermont, in Rockland County, the original terminus of the Erie Road. The largest of these towns between Jersey City and Nyack is Englewood, an active and flourishing village about fifteen miles from New-York, containing about 3,000 inhabitants within a radius of one mile from the railway station. This place has been built up within the past ten years. In earlier days it was known as "Liberty Pole," and there was one store and a little school-house located here, at which the children for miles around took their Winter's schooling. It now presents every appearance of thrift and enterprise. The lots, in what is styled the village proper, all have a frontage of 50 feet, and run to a depth of from 100 to 150 feet. Englewood is not incorporated as yet, but is governed by what is called a "Protection Society," which is chartered by the Legislature. Twelve marshals, residents of the place, are empowered to make arrests, and this system of police is so good that the village is kept unusually clear of depredators. Englewood forms part of Hackensack township, for the authorities of which—its Board of Road Commissioners—the local improvements are carried on. For the mechanic, however, whose daily occupation brings him to New-York at an early hour in the morning, and who quits work when the afternoon is far advanced, Englewood offers no inducements as a place of residence; for the reason that the trains of the Northern Road do not run at seasonable hours to enable him to leave here for business purposes, or to return hither after his day's work is ended. To such as are not compelled to labor ten hours per day, however, and can afford to build their homes, there are many attractions at Englewood to draw them thither. Property has advanced rapidly in value, and is still increasing every year. A single instance will show the ratio of this advance: Six years ago a gentleman, now one of the most prominent in the place, bought a cottage house, in what was then little more than an open country district, for $2,850. After residing in it for two years he disposed of it for $5,000, and the same property was resold last year, or five years after the first purchase, for $7,000. Lots may now be purchased here for from $500 to $3,500. It is estimated that for $5,000—allowing $1,000 for the cost of a lot and $4,000 for the cost of building—a comfortable home may be erected at Englewood. The class of people who are able to secure homes of this character form, in the main, the population of the place—a most desirable class of citizens for any town, as every one must admit. There are quite a number of mechanics residing here, but nearly all of them are of the better-to-do sort, are owners of their residences, and work in the town itself. Very few houses are to be hired here, the residents being in almost all cases house-owners. The few that are rented bring from $600 to $1,500 per annum. There are four churches and fine school facilities in the town: the streets are in excellent condition and well lighted. The commutation by railroad is $65 per year. An Athenæum which is to contain a library, public hall, free reading-room, three stores and a bank is now being erected at a cost of about $65,000. The price of living is about the same as that which prevails in this City.

The above two instances will give a very clear idea of the character of the towns in Northern New-Jersey which are being populated by those who are driven out of this City by the inordinate and constantly increasing taxes that are being heaped upon the citizens of New-York.

J. F. BINGHAM, D. D., late a minister of the Congregational Church, has been recommended to the Bishop of Connecticut as a candidate for priest's orders.

Of sixty regular Episcopal parishes in the diocese of Bishop KERFOOT, of Pittsburg, Penn., only one-fourth rent their pews. In all the rest the seats are free.

Three churches, with 110 communicants and 1,600 Sunday-school pupils, have been established by the Protestant Episcopal denomination in Nevada.

The Lutherans from Denmark, Norway and Sweden are generally classified as the Scandinavian branch of that denomination. They have about 140 ministers, 380 congregations and 50,000 communicant members.

The Episcopal Board of Missions acknowledge total receipts from "mite chests," since Oct. 1, 1869, of $114,388 70. The sums range from a few cents to $20, the average being about $3.

The whole property of Wesleyan University now amounts to $675,103, and the total income during the past year was $23,734, which will be increased $4,160 by recent donations.

Of the 1,469 congregations in the Southern Presbyterian Church, only 409 have pastors, and about 600 have regular or partial supplies, and about 430 are destitute of any stated ministry.

Hon. GREEN CLAY SMITH, formerly M. C. from Kentucky and Major-General in the Union army, but more recently Governor of the Territory of Montana, has united with the Baptist Church and become a minister.

The Sisters of St. Mary have opened their promised charity, at No. 206 West Fortieth-street. It is to be known as "St. Mary's Hospital for Children." They begin with fifteen beds, trusting to increase the number very soon.

The London Congregational Board has voted to adopt hereafter in the settlement of pastors the American system of councils, which shall certify to the regular standing in the denomination of the pastor.

In seven counties of Pennsylvania, with a population of 300,000, there is but one Baptist church in each county. In ten other counties, with an aggregate of nearly a third of a million people, there is no Baptist organization whatever.

The bell of the Presbyterian Church of Fredericksburg, Va., was melted down into Confederate cannon in 1862. Since that time the belfry has been vacant, but recently the congregation has purchased a bell weighing 1,884 pounds, which is now in place.

Rev. Dr. DAGGET'S resignation of the pastorate of Yale College Chapel has been accepted by the Society. No successor has been selected as yet. The different ministers in the Faculty alternate in taking charge of the services. The position is a hard and unenviable one.

Rev. ALFRED C. ROE, the famous military chaplain and lecturer of this City, has accepted a call of the First Presbyterian Church of Lowell, Mass., and assumed the pastorate under a systematic plan of weekly collections for the support of the gospel and a free church.

Rev. PETER STRYKER, D. D., for many years well and favorably known here as the pastor of the Thirty-fourth-street Reformed Dutch Church, but more recently of the North Broadway Church in Philadelphia, has accepted a call to the pastorate of the Presbyterian Church in Rome, N. Y.

There was a refreshing directness in John's solution of this theological problem, propounded by his wife: "John, do you think we'll know each other in heaven?" "Of course; do you think we shall be bigger fools there than here?"

At Wooster, Ohio, on the 7th ult., a university of the first class, under the control of the Presbyterian Synod of Ohio, was opened. The buildings, though yet incomplete, have cost over $150,000. The endowment fund already amounts to a half million of dollars.

Rev. Mr. YARDLEY, of the Berkely Divinity School, Middletown, Conn., has, by his personal exertions during the past Summer, raised over $60,000 for the institution. The school is doing well, but needs a larger endowment to meet its needs.

The corner-stone of a grammar and divinity school was recently laid in Oregon. The grounds cover four city blocks. In Denver, Col., another has just been completed, of imposing proportions. Adjoining it, a magnificent cathedral and Episcopal residence are immediately to be erected.

The Advance contains the following item: Mrs. LINERMORE, (Universalist,) recently preached in the Protestant Episcopal Church at Epping, N. H., in her usual robes. The church is about half deistical and half evangelical, it is said, with a good prospect now of getting a lecture from the Bishop. Certainly something is wrong in the church.

According to the Presbyterian, the churches in Philadelphia belonged to five Presbyteries, which reported to the Assembly last May. Separating them from their associated country churches, we have the following figures: Total membership, 18,137; added last year, on examination and profession of faith, 1,272; money raised, $714,081.

The Journal & Messenger (Baptist) says that since Rev. J. HYATT SMITH, of Brooklyn, has published the prospectus of a book in which he pleads for toleration on the subject of open communion, he "has received hints from certain quarters that he ought to leave the denomination; that, holding such views, he is no longer a Baptist."

The editor of the Liberal Christian publishes a curious letter from an indignant non-subscriber living in Concord, N. H., which closes with the singular assertion that "Liberal Christianity is nothing more than an Astronomical Rock Work Prism apparatus to show the system of Pagan Mythology under the cloak of sanctimonious Hypocrisy."

The Board of Home Missions of the United Presbyterians is encountering difficulty from failure of funds. In an appeal put forth by the Secretaries, it is stated that there is a present deficit of $90,000, although the financial year closed with $65,000 in the treasury. It is estimated that $375,000 will be necessary to complete the annual work.

President WOOLSEY intends resigning the Presidency of Yale College in July, 1871. The College Courant says the names most frequently mentioned in connection with the succession are those of Professors PORTER, DWIGHT, THACHER and GILMAN, of Yale; Rev. Dr. THOMPSON, of New-York and President WHITE, of Cornell University. Hitherto none but a Congregational minister has been deemed eligible for the Presidential office. It remains to be seen whether there is sense enough in the corporation to disregard this precedent.

THE CLEVELAND TRAGEDY.

A Description of Dr. Jones—Resolution of Respect to His Memory—Reported Suicide of Mrs. Galentine—Arrangements for the Trial.

The Cleveland Plain Dealer of the 13th inst. gives further particulars of the murder of Dr. W. H. JONES, in that city, by Dr. GALENTINE. The case, in some respects, bears a resemblance to the McFarland-Richardson tragedy. Mrs. GALENTINE states that Dr. JONES' criminal intimacy with her commenced by his forcible entrance to her apartment during the absence of Dr. GALENTINE, and that they had finally made a confession of their guilt to the injured husband. It also appears that GALENTINE did not shoot JONES until the latter had spoken about his crime so openly that it had been hinted at in the newspapers.

Dr. JONES was a fine-looking man, over six feet tall, and weighed probably about 240 pounds. He was well-proportioned, had a handsome face, was urbane in his manners, an excellent conversationalist, and moved in high society. His character was positive, and he was such a man as makes warm friends and bitter enemies. In and about this city he had a host of friends, who testify to his geniality and kindness. He was generous to a fault at times, and in his practice, not only treated gratuitously poor patients who applied to him, but he even would seek them out, and many a prisoner whom he has doctored in the City Prison gratefully remembers him. The deceased was born in Stow, Summit County, Ohio, in 1838, and was consequently thirty-two years of age at the time of his death. He studied medicine in the Cleveland Medical College, (old school,) and also at Ann Arbor, Mich. Prof. FORD, of the latter institution, said of him that he was the best student of anatomy who ever studied there. He practiced medicine for a time in some towns in this part of the State, and during the war enlisted as Surgeon, being appointed to the One Hundred and Fifteenth Regiment. After the war—in the Summer of 1865—he came to this city, where he has since lived. He was an excellent practitioner and soon established a large practice here, mostly on the west side. Four years ago he was elected Professor of Anatomy in the Medical Department of the University of Wooster, better known as the Charity Hospital Medical College of Cleveland. He was recognized as one of the best anatomists in the country, and had the rare faculty of being an admirable lecturer. His lectures were always clear and minute, and he was extremely popular with the students. As a practitioner he ranked far above the average, and was, moreover, a fine surgeon.

He was without peculiarities of family, and his reputation was not unspotted, if common report may be trusted, but with that we have nothing to do now, and in this sketch, at least, our motto shall be de mortuis nil nisi bonum. He was a widower, his wife dying in Richfield.

As we have before stated, his funeral in this city on Monday was very largely attended. The remains were taken to Hudson for interment, in which place the services in the Episcopal Church were attended by nearly all of the inhabitants of Hudson, and by many Cleveland people, who went on the funeral train. Prof. HOSFORD, of the Western Reserve College, preached an impressive sermon. We cannot more appropriately close this article than by giving the following resolutions, passed on Monday, at a meeting of the students of the Medical Department of the University of Wooster:

Whereas, In His great goodness and all-wise judgment, Almighty God has been pleased to call hence our beloved professor, Dr. W. H. JONES; and

Resolved, That we as a class extend to the brothers, sisters and friends of the deceased, our sincere sympathy in this their great affliction.

Resolved, That we acknowledge in his death an irreparable loss to us as a teacher, and to the profession a most faithful worker and one of its brightest ornaments.

A wild report was in circulation last evening to the effect that MRS. GALENTINE had committed suicide. How the report originated it is impossible to tell, but there was no foundation for it whatever. She is, indeed, in a state of mind bordering on distraction, but has made no attempt whatever, so far as we can learn from her friends, to take her life. She remained last night at the residence of her husband's parents, and her absence from her own rooms may have started the report of her having committed suicide.

Mr. GALENTINE remains in jail and is visited by friends occasionally. He desires us to state that he is happy to see his friends, but he desires that those people who go to stare at him out of curiosity, and quiz him, would keep away; he does not wish to be annoyed by such persons. He will have his preliminary examination on Friday, before the Police Court, which will probably be but a mere matter of form, as his trial must be before the Common Pleas Court. In this case Messrs E. P. & A. T. SLADE, prosecuting attorney and assistant of the county, will prosecute, and Mr. S. E. ADAMS will have associated with him in the defense either Judge COPPERTHWAIT, Judge RANNEY or Judge ANDREWS, if the services of one of them can be obtained.

Death of Thos. C. Perkins.

The Hartford Post says of Mr. THOS. C. PERKINS, who died on the 12th inst.: "He was born in this city, July 29, 1796. He was the son of ENOCH PERKINS, Esq., also an eminent lawyer, and ANNA PITKIN PERKINS, daughter of the Rev. TIMOTHY PITKIN, of Farmington. He received his preliminary education at the Hartford Grammar School, and was graduated at Yale in 1818, taking the salutatory, and leaving a fine reputation as a classical scholar. He studied law with Hon. SIMEON P. STAPLES, of New-Haven, and was admitted to the bar in Hartford, where he has ever since lived and continued in practice of the law. In the beginning of his career he was for some time Secretary of the Protection Fire Insurance Company. He has filled several town offices, and has been many times a member of State Senate and House. A few years ago he was elected a Judge of the Supreme Court, but he declined the honor, preferring a private life in the practice of the profession which he loved."

Description of a New Jewelry-Store.

In the course of a week or two Messrs. TIFFANY & Co., the well-known jewelers, will remove into their new building, at the corner of Broadway and Fifteenth-street, formerly the site of the Church of the Pilgrims.

The structure is built of iron, and is five stories high. It is 140 feet deep, and is 78 feet wide on the Broadway front. It is strictly fire-proof. The architecture is of the composite order. The foundation is built on blocks of granite of the very largest size. Between the iron beams on the first floor are sprung brick arches. The upper side of the floor, is filled in with cement, over which is laid two-inch strips of Georgia pine flooring. The basement is practically burglar-proof, and will contain a pair of boilers of 125 horse-power, which are to heat the building and to run the elevator and engine for the work-shops. Ninety feet, or about two-thirds of the area of the basement, will be used for storage, and the remaining 50 feet for the packing and unpacking of goods.

The whole of the first floor will be used as a sales-room. The walls will be slightly tinted, and the interior will be very plainly fitted up.

The counters will be made of solid black-walnut, and the cases resting upon them will be made of ebony and heavy English plate glass.

The upper stories will be used for work-shops for the manufacture of diamond and gem jewelry and silver ware.

The price paid for the lease of the ground, and for the church building, together with all its fittings, carpets, pulpit, chairs, pews, organ, &c., was $78,000. Shortly after the purchase was made, and before they commenced to build, Messrs. TIFFANY & Co. were offered $225,000 for the property.

This church edifice was sold to a congregation in the upper part of the City, who had it torn down and rebuilt in another locality. The organ, which was considered to be one of the best in the City, was sold to the Dutch Reformed Church, in Thirty-fourth-street, near Eighth-avenue, for $8,000. The trustees of the Cheever Church, after paying the debts of the church, had a balance remaining on hand of $50,000, which was presented to Dr. CHEEVER by the congregation.

Arrival of the Steam-ship Hansa.

The steam-ship Hansa, of the Bremen line, came up the bay this morning, having arrived from Bremen, which port she left on the 1st inst. She had every bit of bunting on board set, and as she steamed up the bay she made a magnificent appearance, and delighted the hearts of every German who saw her. She ran close by the French frigate Primauquet, which was lying off the Battery, and saluted her in a nautical manner. After she arrived at her wharf, at Hoboken, she was visited by a large number of influential German residents, who congratulated the Captain on his successful trip. She brought 803 passengers, and a full cargo of merchandise. The agents of the line are daily expecting orders to dispatch the Weser, and will do so as soon as it is safe for her to leave.

A New Catholic Charity—Lodging-Houses for Poor Boys.

The Society of St. Vincent de Paul, one of the numerous Catholic charitable organizations of this City, has set on foot a movement for the establishment of lodging-houses for poor boys. An appeal to the charitable has been made by the Particular Council, or central body of the Society, for obtaining a portion of the amount necessary to carry out its beneficent design. One lodging-house has already been opened at No. 39 Warren-street, which was estimated at that season, and the prospect is that it will be too small when cold weather approaches. The Society of St. Vincent de Paul is world-wide; and in this City, as elsewhere, is made up of confraternities belonging to the several Catholic parishes. It is unnecessary to dwell on the miserable life led by a vast number of boys in New-York between the ages of seven and sixteen. It is too well known. The members of the order of Christian Brothers, who are to be put in charge of the lodging-houses, are to impart to them such instruction, both religious and secular, as they need to enable them to resist evil temptations, and then to lead a Christian life and otherwise direct them, that they may become good and useful citizens. The various Catholic pastors of the City are empowered to receive subscriptions and donations for this object, as also are the Presidents of the Conferences, or members authorized by them, and the Treasurer of the Council, Mr. JAMES LYNCH, No. 18 Broadway. The new enterprise has the special approval of Very Rev. WILLIAM STARES, D. D., Vicar-General of the Archdiocese of New-York.

Military Gossip.

A communication, relating to the discipline of the National Guard, &c., has been received from a correspondent, who signs himself "Querist." Its publication, together with a reply to it, is reserved for next Sunday, in consequence of the crowded condition of our columns today.

The "Old Guard" will make its first parade in its splendid full-dress uniform, on Wednesday next, on which occasion nearly fifty members will parade. After the parade a collation will be enjoyed at the ASTOR House.

The Yellow Fever Diminishing—Proposed Reply to Gen. McDowell.

Eight soldiers, two laundresses and six children were transported yesterday from the Quarantine Hospital, at West Bank, to Governors' Island, after having perfectly recovered from attacks of yellow fever.

The number of soldiers now invalided at West Bank Hospital is 49.

The Board of Health met yesterday, but no business was transacted beyond the consideration of the first of the reply to the letter of Gen. McDOWELL, which is being prepared by the Sanitary Committee. The document will be completed on Tuesday, and will then be submitted to the Board. It is understood that the Committee assail the strongly entrenched positions of Gen. McDOWELL with great vigor and skill, but it is hinted that, not relying upon open attack entirely, the Board will resort to strategy and flank the enemy by submitting a detailed history of the yellow fever controversy to the War Department. The fever has now almost entirely disappeared, and Dr. MORRIS, City Sanitary Inspector, yesterday reported that he is not advised of any new cases either in the City or upon Governor's Island.

SATURDAY, Oct. 15—P. M.

Money closed up quite easy today, with a free offering reported at 5@6 ₱ cent. and call to the leading street firms. The discount business was fair at about steady rates, with more inquiry noted for prime paper. The City bank return, published this afternoon, shows a gain of $251,053 in the Legal Tender reserve, with a loss of $986,933 of specie, and $211,402 of deposits. An addition of $294,461 has been made to the loan averages; and of $874,496 to the item of circulation. The City bank clearances for the week have been $823,547,810, or a daily average of $87,287,885. The total amount of the United States bonds of 1871 redeemed thus far is given by the Treasury Office as $3,016,000.

The Gold movement has been without notable activity, and the variations in the price have been of little moment, the extremes having been unchanged, and the closing quotation 112¼, as on yesterday. The Customs drain this week has averaged $638,830 a day, the aggregate for the whole week being $3,231,182, while the coin interest disbursements of the Treasury Office have been only $303,006. The Gold Exchange Bank clearances, today, were $87,621,000. The day's specie shipments were $372,942, making the total for the week $654,924. There has been more than the usual Saturday dullness in the foreign exchanges, with rates nominally unaltered. The specie exports for the week are reported as follows:

Steam-ship Java, Liverpool—
Gold Bars	$92,786 00
Foreign Silver	29,323 00
American Silver	27,567 00
Steam-ship Algeria, Liverpool—

Steam-ship Columbia, Havana—
American Gold	6,000 00
Spanish Doubloons	13,400 00
Bark Hallesport, Buenos Ayres—
Patriot Doubloons	64,000 00
Schooner Minnie Jacmel—
American Gold	3,000 00
Steam-ship City of London, Liverpool—
American Gold	20,944 38
Mexican Gold	14,000 00
Silver Bars	37,998 23
Total	$454,323 67

A somewhat livelier business has been reported in the Public Funds at a stronger range of prices, favored by the higher figures from London and the easier movement in the Money line. State Bonds have been slow of sale, and the dealings in the Railway Mortgages have been devoid of animation. Central Pacific Sixes closed firmly at 90¾@90½; Union Pacifics steady at 83. The Railway and Miscellaneous Share dealings, though not active, have indicated a buoyant market, particularly for the Vanderbilt Stocks, North-west Common and Preferred, and the Western Union Telegraph, the latter selling up to 41½. The favorable interpretation of the Bank return tended to strengthen values.

After the late Boards the following quotations were made as compared with Friday night, the market closing strong and active:

SATURDAY AT THE RACES.

Saturday's Programme at the Jerome Park Meeting.

The Course, the Club-house and the Company.

A brighter or lovelier October day than yesterday, the last day of the Fall meeting at Jerome Park, could not have been enjoyed. So cloudless was the sky and so warm the sun, that had it not been for the sombre tints of the surrounding foliage one might have supposed that Summer had returned. That it would induce the attendance of a large assemblage at the Park might have been expected, but few were prepared to see the immense crowds that thronged the stands, the quarter-stretch, the betting-ring and the Club-house. Every carriage that drove up to the Club-house set down its load of lovely and charmingly-dressed women, until the place seemed literally overflowing with a wealth of beauty. The scene becomes one of animation as the time approaches for the first race. The throngs have left the Club-house, crossed the track, and made their way to the stands. These, especially the central one, presents the appearance of a huge bed of gay and brilliant flowers. The pool-seller in his little stand is bellowing himself hoarse. The quarter-stretch is crowded with gentlemen making private bets or commenting on the horses, which have now been saddled and are taking preliminary canters. The third bell rings, and a gentleman in a remarkably bad stove-pipe hat, carrying a blue and white flag, proceeds down the course, followed by the horses that are to take part in the race. And now are shown some of the peculiarities of equine temper. One animal stands looking stolidly before him as if he was indifferent about the race, while his neighbor is prancing and curveting as if every joint was strung on wires.

At last the animals are in line, and when the flag falls, there is a thunder of hoofs, a cloud of dust, a flash of prismatic colors, a shout of "They're off!" a minute or two of almost breathless suspense—and the first race is decided. The other races are similar, excepting, of course, the steeple-chase, for which every one waits, and which is rather disappointing if it does not include a severe accident. At last, however, even this is over, and in less than five minutes afterward the stands are empty. The ladies, or at least a majority of them, trip off to the Club-house, there to solace themselves with cold chicken and champagne, to be followed, as they were yesterday, by a cotillion, which took place in the large drawing-room, to the music of a fine band, and in which several hundred couples took part.

Not the least pleasant part of a race-day, perhaps, is to return from the course, particularly for those who have made successful bits. They are full of mirth and see jokes where their friends who are on the losing side can see none at all. As the carriages dash away from the Club-house farewells are exchanged, the ladies wrap themselves in their shawls, the well-bred horses prance beneath the lash, and soon Jerome Park, with all its allurements, is left far behind beneath the shades of night.

Detailed Account of the Races—The Winners of the Day and the Time.

The last day of the meeting was distinguished for the merciless slaughter of the favorites, four out of five going down before outsiders. In the first race, Mr. BELMONT'S colt By the Sea, by the Derby winner Thormanby, dam Bernice, was compelled to strike his colors by Mr. LITTELL'S beautiful bay, Mary Clark, a splendid specimen of the "roan cross" of the blood of Lexington and Glencoe. The backers of the Babylon stable went fairly crazy over its representative, and so great was the "plunging" on this race that By the Sea brought in pools $1,300 against $400 for Mr. LITTELL'S double entry.

The Lambard Stakes, for three-year olds, was the richest stake of the meeting, and produced the best race of the week. There were twenty-three entries, at $300 each, half forfeit, with $3,000 added by the liberal patron of the turf after whom the race is named—CHARLES A. LAMBARD, Esq., of Boston—that the value of the stake was about $9,750 to the winner. The distance was two miles, and the contestants for the rich prize were Capt. MOORE'S ch. c. Foster, a full brother to Kaukhak; Mr. A. BELMONT'S ch. f. Vineuse, by Lexington, out of Village; Mr. MORRIS' chesnut filly Remorseless, by Eclipse, dam Barbarity, and therefore full sister to Ruthless; and MCCORMICK and PAGE'S bay colt Hamburg, a flyer at two years old, but worthless at three. Foster had run twice before this season, when notoriously not up to the mark in condition, and on both occasions was beaten a nose comb to Mr. BELMONT'S great crack Kingfisher, then owned by Mr. SWIGERT.

The next race, the free handicap, witnessed the second slaughter of the favorites for My Maryland and Corsican, both strongly fancied by their respective friends, were both beaten by the outsider, Flash of Lightning, who only brought $150 in pools of $1,000. The two-year old race was another facer for the backers of the favorite, for Girl of My Heart, bought expressly by Major BACON to win this race at the Jerome Park sale the day before, and with odds of $100 to $40 on her, was beaten easily by her solitary opponent, Miss Nellie, the winner is well-bred, being by Eclipse, dam Laura Farris, herself a good race mare in her day. The three-year-old Selling Stake had three runners: Merry Thought, Talaria and Hilarity, and they sold pretty close to each other, bringing respectively $260, $250 and $240. Talaria won it easily, the favorite being last in the race.

The steeple-chase was one of the most exciting and best contested races ever witnessed. Three started, Oysterman, Biddy Malone and Eminence, but practically only the first two were in the race, for Eminence bolted and refused his jumps directly after starting. Oysterman led for the first circuit of the course, and then Biddy Malone (who was ridden this time by HUGH GAFFNEY, by far the best of our cross-country jockeys) joined issue with him, and together they took every remaining leap in succession, both rising at them at the same moment. The last hurdle, half-way down the home stretch, was jumped by both simultaneously, Oysterman hitting the top rail as he went over. Superior riding now told, for GAFFNEY, who had nursed his mare with wonderful patience, called upon Biddy for a final effort, and, gamely responding, she won the race by four lengths.

THE TWO-YEAR-OLD STAKES.

The Two-Year-Old Stakes of $300 each, half forfeit, with $600 added, one mile and an eighth, had nineteen entries, five of which came to the post. These were Mr. BELMONT'S ch. c. By the Sea, Mr. LITTELL'S gr. f. Mary Clark, and his ch. f. Rattan; Mr. PENNOCK'S ch. c. by Censor, dam Rebecca Price, and DENISON & CRAWFURD'S b. c. Mascus. In pools, Mr. BELMONT'S entry sold for $1,300, Mr. LITTELL'S for $410, PENNOCK'S, $180, and DENISON & CRAWFURD'S, $110. By the Sea was first away, but as they went under the string Mary Clark was leading, with Rattan second, the favorite third, PENNOCK fourth, and DENISON last. As they went around the base of the Club-house hill, Rattan was in front, with Mary Clark second and the favorite third; but on coming in view the grey filly was seen in the lead three lengths ahead of Rattan; the others as they were. The race was now virtually over, for Mary Clark kept speedily increasing her lead at every stride, and galloped home the easiest of winners by six lengths; By the Sea beating Rattan a neck for second place. Time—2:04½.

FIRST RACE—SWEEPSTAKES.

Time—2:04½.

THE LAMBARD STAKES.

The Lambard Stakes, for three-year olds, $600 each, half forfeit, with $3,000 added by C. A. LAMBARD, Esq., two miles, was the next race, and the most important both of the day and meeting. There were twenty-three entries, of which four came to the post—Foster, Remorseless, Hamburg and Vineuse, representatives of Capt. MOORE'S, Mr. MORRIS', Mr. PATTERSON'S and Mr. BELMONT'S stables. Foster, notwithstanding he had twice been defeated by Kingfisher, (when out of condition,) was made the favorite against the field, selling for $1,300, Hamburg $500, Vineuse $300, and Remorseless $210. The night previous, at the Club-rooms, Vineuse had sold second choice, running Foster very close for favoritism. PALMER had the mount on the favorite, and looked very confident; C. MILLER was on Remorseless; ROBINSON on Hamburg, and BURNS on Vineuse.

Foster and Vineuse were first off, Remorseless next and Hamburg last. As they went past the quarter-pole Foster was leading Vineuse a length, Remorseless as far behind the second, and Hamburg last. Going around the Club-house hill Foster still led, with Vineuse at his haunches, and Remorseless two lengths behind her, the same separating Hamburg from Mr. MORRIS' filly. Reappearing in view, the only chance was in Remorseless being close up with Vineuse and at the latter's saddle-girths; Hamburg still the whipper-in. There was no change at the three-quarter-pole, but as they passed the stand on the first mile in 1:50, Remorseless was second, and Hamburg side by side with Vineuse, whose belt was nearly shot. At the turn Vineuse beat a retreat altogether, and Remorseless drew closer to his horses. At the quarter-pole Remorseless got close to Foster's haunches, and Hamburg was at the filly's saddle-girths; the race now becoming extraordinarily exciting, for the respective backers of Hamburg and Remorseless were in hopes that their favorite would show in front. As they went round the hill, PALMER momentarily gave Foster his head, and he shot away from his horses in a moment, but his rider at once got him under a strong pull. As they came in view again, Foster was seen leading a couple of clear lengths, with Remorseless second, a length before Hamburg, and Vineuse far behind. In this way they turned into the head of the stretch, when PALMER, finding he had the race safe in hand, eased his horse, and came home a winner by a clear length in easy exercising gallop, Remorseless second as far before Hamburg, and Vineuse beaten off. Time—3:47¾. Value of stake, $9,750.

SECOND RACE—LIMITED STAKES.

T. G. Moore's ch. c. Foster, by Lexington, dam Verona, by imp. Yorkshire (Palmer)..... 1
F. Morris' ch. f. Remorseless, by Eclipse, dam Barbarity (C. Miller)..... 2
McCormick & Page's b. c. Hamburg, by Lexington, dam by Churchill (Robinson)..... 3
A. Belmont's ch. f. Vineuse, by Lexington, dam imp. Filigree (Burns)..... 4

THE FREE HANDICAP.

This was a sweepstakes of $25 each, play or pay, with $1,000 added, the second horse to receive one-half the entrance money, one mile and three-quarters, had three runners: Corsican, 112 pounds; My Maryland, 87 pounds, and Flash of Lightning, 86 pounds. To the pools, My Maryland had the call, selling for $550; Corsican, $500 and Flash of Lightning, $155. My Maryland made the running, with Corsican second, and Flash third around the Club-house hill. Coming in view, Corsican and My Maryland were lapped, four lengths before Flash, and as the horses came up the stretch and were under the string Corsican had his head in front of My Maryland, who was three lengths before Flash of Lightning. The horses now got closer together, and as the quarter-pole was passed, they were in a bunch. Around the hill My Maryland showed a length in front, with Flash three lengths before Corsican, to whom the weight was telling unmistakably. Reappearing in sight, Flash was at My Maryland's saddle girths, ten lengths before Corsican, and the race was left to the two leaders. A fine struggle ensued between them; at the head of the stretch they were head and head, but Flash of Lightning, running with great gameness, won the race by two lengths, Corsican twenty lengths behind. Time, 3:20.

THIRD RACE—FREE HANDICAP—ONE MILE AND THREE-QUARTERS.

Clark & Grenabud's b. f. Flash of Lightning, 3 years, 86 pounds (Black)..... 1
Gov. Bowie's ch. f. My Maryland, 3 years, 87 pounds (Stoops)..... 2
Bacon & Holland's b. g. Corsican, 5 years, 112 pounds (Palmer)..... 3

Time—3:20.

THE TWO-YEAR-OLD RACE.

The two-year-old race, a selling sweepstakes of $15 each, play or pay, with $300 added, three-quarters of a mile, had only two runners, D. D. WITHERS' ch. f. Miss Nellie, by Eclipse, dam Laura Farris, and BACON & HOLLAND'S b. f. Girl of My Heart. The betting was $100 to $50 on Girl of My Heart, an imported hand high-bred filly by Skirmisher out of Fluke, that Mr. BELMONT had weeded out of his stable the day before, by putting it into the auction sale. The favorite led to the three-quarter pole, but was in difficulties directly afterward, and Miss Nelly, passing her, won the race easily by four lengths. Time—1:24.

FOURTH RACE—SELLING SWEEPSTAKES.

D. D. Withers ch. f. Miss Nellie, by Eclipse, dam Laura Farris, $300, 83 pounds (Clare)..... 1
Bacon & Holland's b. f. Girl of My Heart, by Skirmisher, dam Fluke, $300, 87 pounds (Hannone)..... 2

Time—1:24.

THE THREE-YEAR OLD RACE.

This was a selling sweepstake of $15 each, play or pay, with $300 added, one mile and a quarter, in which Merry Thought, ninety-two pounds, Hilarity, ninety-two pounds, and Talaria, ninety-seven pounds, entered. The betting between them was pretty even, Merry Thought bringing $260, Talaria $250, and Hilarity $240. Merry Thought and Talaria raced together for half a mile, when the former gave it up and Talaria, holding her lead throughout, won easily by three lengths; ten lengths between second and third. Time—2:18½.

FIFTH RACE—SELLING SWEEPSTAKES.

B. G. Thomas' b.f. Talaria, $500, 97 pounds, (Burns) 1
Gov. Bowie's ch.f. Hilarity, $300, 92 pounds, (Stoops) 2
J. F. Purdy's b. f. Merry Thought, $300, 92 pounds (Brown)..... 3

Time—2:18¾.

THE STEEPLE CHASE.

The steeple chase had entered Oysterman, Eminence and Biddy Malone. HUGH GAFFNEY rode the mare in place of GRIFFIN, and she was a better favorite in consequence. Oysterman sold for $1,300, Biddy Malone $750, and Eminence $350. The latter refused his second jump, and took no further part in the race. Oysterman led a dozen lengths over the jumps on making the first circuit; on the second, Biddy Malone closed the gap rapidly, collared Oysterman, laid with him side by side over the remaining leaps, amid the acclamations of the spectators, the last one, the hurdle at the end of the grand stand, being taken simultaneously. Oysterman dwelled a moment, having hit the top rail somewhat hard, and Reddy drawing away, won the race, amid much excitement, by four lengths. Time—5:55. This race finished the meeting.

SIXTH RACE—STEEPLECHASE HANDICAP.

J. Donohue's br. m. Biddy Malone, 5 years, 144 pounds (Gaffney)..... 1
D. McDaniels' br. h. Oysterman, 6 years, 154 pounds (Welch)..... 2

E. Leon two, and Surprise two. The contest, of course, lay between the latter. Surprise made the mile in 2:29, winning $750. Leon won $200, being second. For the 2:40 purse the following animals contested: JOHN MURPHY'S br. g. James H. Coleman, JOHN FLANDERS' r. g. Lottery, A. HAMMIT'S ch. g. Bashaw Maid, and W. H. JARVIS' blk. g. Black Crook. The mare won the first heat in 2:30. On the second heat Coleman won in 2:31½. On the third mile the Maid came in ahead in 2:32¾, and on the fourth heat, by about three lengths, in 2:34, with the Maid second, Lottery last. Bashaw Maid won the fifth and last heat in 2:35, and was accordingly declared the victor. THE "RED" AND THE "WHITE."

The Great Champion Game of Base-Ball at Chicago—Victory for the White Stockings—Another Challenge from Cincinnati.

The Chicago papers give full details of the great base-ball contest in that city, on Thursday, between the Red and White Stockings. We take the following from the Republican of the 14th:

The object for which the White Stocking Club of Chicago is claimed by everybody to have been organized has been accomplished. Its men were selected with a view to form a nine that could defeat any club in the country in general, and the far-famed Red Stockings of Cincinnati in particular. That feat has been achieved. The Mutuals, Haymakers, Atlantics, Unions and Athletics have been compelled to surrender the ball to Chicago, and to-day the hitherto invincible Cincinnatis stand squarely and fairly beaten in two successive match games. The first victory, as everybody knows, was won at the home of the Red Legs, the second and decisive one was accomplished yesterday afternoon at Dexter Park. After the first game, it was claimed by the vanquished ones that "Chicago played with ten men, the tenth one being the umpire;" after the second, nothing can be claimed save that the boys of the Garden City won because they were better the players. Now nothing remains for the White Socks to achieve, but to defeat the Mutuals of New-York a second time, and then they can fly the whip pennant of championship, and claim the much-coveted silver ball.

THE SCENE.

When the game had once commenced, the scene that met the eye was of a most interesting character. As far as the vision could reach—wherever anything like a mark of the game could be had—it rested upon densely packed fellow-humans. There were ladies in abundance, all dressed in their gayest attire, and manifesting the greatest interest in one or the other Club; just as much interest as if they knew all about the game. There were old men, middle-aged men, young men, and as a matter of course there were the irrepressible boys. No school regulations could keep them away, and if they did not possess the requisite amount of money to purchase the requisite half-fare ticket, they gained admission in some surreptitious way through the kindness of some accommodating hole in the fence. Two juveniles that our reporter heard of stole into the Park about 6 o'clock in the morning and hiding themselves under the seats, remained out of sight until the commencement of the game.

A livelier, more interesting scene than that of yesterday afternoon has never been witnessed since base-ball was inaugurated in our city. It was beyond all doubt the great event in the Chicago history of the diamond field and its triumphs.

By a happy choice, ROBERT FERGUSON, the celebrated captain and catcher of the equally celebrated Red Legs, was selected as the only elected umpire, before the clubs went upon the ground, so that a great deal of the usual wrangling was avoided. The White Stockings were the first to put in an appearance, and as each man stepped into view he was loudly cheered. The Reds followed shortly after—about 2½ o'clock, and they also received a very flattering ovation from the spectators.

The toss, as usual, was lost by JIMMY WOOD, and at 2:40, time was called, and the Chicagos went to the bat for the first inning.

A TIE.

A tie on the eighth inning gave the game an immense degree of interest, and the most intense excitement prevailed, though at the same time it was noticeable that while the Chicago boys were still cool and determined, the heavy batting of the first half of the last inning had more than demoralized their opponents. DUFFY, who led at the bat, secured his first on the first clear muff made by GEORGE WRIGHT in the game. MCATEE was put out at first, SWEASY fielding in the ball, and DUFFY going to first by sharp practice. When MCATEE struck he had to send to GOULD, after having the striker returned the ball to SWEASY to head off DUFFY. That personage then ran back toward first, and SWEASY in giving GOULD another chance with the ball overthrew. WOOD secured first on a right field strike, DUFFY going home. CUTHBERT gained second on a powerful hit between right and centre, sending WOOD in. FLYNN on a grounder over the first base-bag went to first, CUTHBERT going in. TREACY knocked up a high fly just inside the striker's base, but ALLISON missed it, and he secured first base, FLYNN making second. KING struck the ball savagely, gaining first, and sending FLYNN home and TREACY to third. MYRALS following up the good work gained second base by a corker to the left field, TREACY securing his tally and KING his third base. PINKHAM went out on the fly to SWEASY, KING getting in in the meantime on a passed ball. DUFFY by a big left field hit got to third base, and MEYERLE made his tally easily. MCATEE sent DUFFY home, and made his first on a good strike to centre, after which WOOD went out on the foul fly taken by GOULD. Side out with eight runs. The excitement at this juncture was wonderful to witness. Men cheered till they were hoarse, and threw their hats in the air until they lost them. The Red Stockings, it was seen, had now to make nine tallies, or more than they had made all the game, in order to win, and that would be an impossibility. They, however, though they must have felt like beaten men, went to the bat bravely, and with an evident determination to die hard, to say the least of it. GEORGE WRIGHT, by a safe hit to short-centre, secured first, going to second on a passed ball. GOULD made first on a safe grounder to left, GEORGE running to third. WATERMAN hit a grounder to centre, but CUTHBERT took it on the fly, WRIGHT in the meantime running home. ALLISON, by a safe liner to left, made his first, GOULD passing to second, and stealing third. HARRY WRIGHT made his first on called balls; LEONARD, by a grounder to WOOD, got first, but forced HARRY WRIGHT out, ALLISON scoring the tally, and GOULD his tally. BRAINARD, by a safe hit to left, secured first, allowing LEONARD to reach third, and ALLISON to add one to his score. BRAINARD went to second, and LEONARD home on a passed ball. SWEASY, by a safe hit to centre, made second, BRAINARD coming in. He then stole third, and on a passed ball, but died there, for MCVEY was fielded out by MEYERLE to MCATEE—5 runs. Score, 16 to 15.

Umpire—R. Ferguson, of the Atlantic Base-ball Club.
Time of Game—Three hours and fifteen minutes.

THE PLAY.

From first to last the game was one of the finest ever seen in the country. Barring a couple of overthrows by WATERMAN, and one by SWEASY, a short throw by MEYERLE, and a very few muffs, it was a perfect game. Up to the end of the fifth inning not a point was lost on either side, and even then the increase in the scores was rather the result of an increase in the strength of the batting than by reason of errors. The events of the game may be said to be an immense throw by CUTHBERT in the far centre-field to MEYERLE on third base; the strategy resorted to by DUFFY to avoid being forced out, and WOOD'S double play. It is invidious to make comparisons where all do well, and therefore nothing need be said of individual play. The game impressed one fact on the mind of every spectator, and that was that the Red Stockings were outplayed from the start. The game was lost before commenced, and the little spurt made by them on the sixth inning only served to give the Chicagos renewed energy and determination. To the simple Mr. Fair-play, the game cannot be said in praise. Quiet in all his decisions, firm and sharp in calling balls and strikes, ever attentive to the game, he presented one of the best specimens of an umpire ever seen. It is sufficient, perhaps, to say, that neither side questioned one of his decisions, and when he called an a man out, that man came in invariably with the knowledge that the umpire was right.

The German Ladies' Fair.

The Fair in aid of the wounded soldiers of the German Army, and for the benefit of the widows and orphans of the slain, will commence at the Thirty-seventh Regiment Armory to-morrow evening, under the auspices of an association of ladies representing the wives and daughters of several leading German citizens. The Music Committee has engaged a large orchestra, which will be in attendance every night until the close of the Fair.

Addresses will be made at the opening by Messrs. CULLEN BRYANT and Dr. KNICKERBOCKER, after which the members of the Arion and Leiderkranz Societies will sing the famous German songs, "Die Wacht am Rhein," and "What is the German's Fatherland." Mme. HERRICH will also give a performance for the benefit of the Fair previous to its close.

Robbers of the Hermit.

Late yesterday afternoon, Assistant District Attorney PURDY made a motion before Judge BLATCHFORD, in the United States District Court, for the release of the steamer Hermit, the alleged Cuban privateer. He said that District-Attorney DAVIS had consented to discontinue the suit against the vessel. Judge BLATCHFORD inquired in order for the release of the Hermit, and for her restoration to her owners. The reason for this action of the Federal authorities did not transpire.

The Cattle Disease in New-York State.

The Hudson Register, of the 14th inst., says:

"The cattle disease still continues in the western part of Great Barrington and Egremont, and deaths of cattle, horses, sheep and swine are of not unfrequent occurrence. A good part of the live stock on the farm of GEORGE M. HALLENBECK have died of the disease, making a loss to him of nearly $1,500. Others have lost stock to the amount of $500 or $600 each, in the same neighborhood. There is something singular about the disease. A cow taken into the neighborhood by Mr. LESTER, became infected and died in less than ten days, which is a feature in the Texan cattle disease, the cattle from that State communicating the disease, but are not affected by it themselves. It is now thought that the disease was communicated by droves of cattle, which some of the farmers in that vicinity kept over night, while on the road to market. There is an important State law, passed in 1860, relative to the cattle disease, which makes it the duty of selectmen to take charge of the cattle infected, to kill the animals if a veterinary surgeon deems it necessary to stop the spread of the disease, the owners to be paid, one-fifth by the town and four-fifths by the State; to brand the cattle infected with the letter P, to distinguish them; and any person who knows or has reason to suspect the existence of the disease among the cattle in his possession or under his care, must give immediate notice to the selectmen, and for failure to do so, shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $500, or by imprisonment not exceeding one year."
